More than Kin

By PATRICIA WENTWORTH
Author of "A Marriage under the Terror"

Miss Wentworth turns again to the period of the Terror; shows France in the throes of the Revolution; depicts the relentless malice of the leaders of the bloodthirsty and unreasoning hordes that swarmed through the streets of Paris celebrating the horrible orgies of Death; gives us a thrilling account of hair-breadth escapes and daring rescues; and withal presents a love story in which the tender blends with the heroic. $1.25 net

Down Our Street

By J. E. BUCKROSE

"Mrs. Bean is a joy forever—well-bred in her wildest vagaries, with the essential politesse du coeur, and full of such delicious vitality and vim that no girl can hope to rival her. Mrs. Buckrose will probably be implored to give her public more of her. Let her resist. Mrs. Bean is perfect as she stands. For the rest of the picture of 'the street'—especially when Miss White and her friends come in—is an excellent, amusing, and rather touching one."—London Observer. $1.35 net

The Claw

By CYNTHIA STOCKLEY
Author of "Poppy," etc.

A wonderful South African love story. Back of the tenderness and the pathos, never intruding, yet never forgotten, is the wonderful, luminous atmosphere of Africa, with its mysterious colors and shadows and scents, and the ever-present suggestion of flowering bushes, "redolent with a fragrance, like the fragrance of a beautiful woman's hair." Frontispiece. $1.35 net

The Ashes of a God

By F. W. BAIN
Author of "A Digit of the Moon," etc.

The Oriental richness, the sensuous charm of word and idea, the grace and flexibility of style, the complete assimilation of Eastern thought, that have characterized this author's earlier works, have perhaps never been more happily combined than in the present work, to render even more beautiful a love story the intrinsic charm of which makes an instantaneous appeal. Frontispiece. $1.25 net (Ready)

Author of "The Patriots," "The Island of Regeneration," etc.

Here's a story of gay gallants and a damsel fair, of galloping hoofs and lovely woman's surprising strength and unexpected weakness, told with all Cyrus Townsend Brady's characteristic dash and vigor. A girl dons a man's clothes, and in a lonely road at night holds up a king's messenger, who is carrying a death warrant for her father. She holds him up, and she wounds him, too, dangerously; and then, with femininine lack of logic, she nurses him back to life, and is wounded herself—in the heart.

The Church of Tomorrow

By REV. J. H. CROOKER, D.D.

Author of "Church of Today" (6000th)

The "Church of Tomorrow" is a searching but sympathetic discussion of the vital problems which now confront the friends of religion and the disciples of Jesus. It deals with essentials rather than details. It is a work of spiritual dynamics rather than parochial mechanics. It describes the importance of the church and defines the reasons for variety in religious organization. It points out the evils of overlapping and the injuries arising from sectarianism. It pleads for church federation and condemns the commercialism of many current church methods.

The author arraigns "the average man" for his indifference to religion, and especially the church; and shows how that indifference drives preachers to sensationalism, impels women to resort to irreligious enterprises to support religion, and keeps children from Christian nurture and the most valuable preparation for life. He demonstrates the important fact that the strength and glory of Protestantism lie in its "congregations," alive with religious spirit and engaged in true religious works which he defines with illuminating insight.

1. The Church: Its Method
   Diversity in Form with Unity of Spirit.
2. Its Task: Feeding the Roots of Life.
3. Its Thought of God: The Taproot of Religion.
4. Its Worship: The Fruitfulness of Prayer.

Beatrice: The Insight of Love

By GEORGE A. GORDON, D.D.

An exquisite monograph on love.

"Some fine things are said of the power of woman in history, and as she appears in literature. The last paragraph is: 'In our Bible the power of women both for evil and for good is recognized as sovereign. Eve is the mother of our woe; Mary is the mother of our Redeemer. Thus great is love in life; supreme is love in woman; terrible is love when under arrest, when it is not allowed to ascend; thus, all-triumphant is love when its course toward the eternal is unchecked, when its ascension is free and sure.' Preached only a few weeks ago in the pulpit of the First Church, Columbus, Ohio, from which Dr. Washington Gladden has for so many years sounded out so many bugle calls to nobler living, this recent sermon now put into attractive booklet form embodies the author's matured philosophy of life and is fragrant with the real essence of the Christian gospel. Simple, almost conversational in its style, it is so convincing in its logic, so suggestive in its indication of what life ought to be and can be to each one of us day by day, that it is not to be wondered that those who first listened to the sermon were touched by it to an unwonted degree. Many besides them will want to keep it close at hand and draw upon it frequently for inspiration. Unique envelope edition, 25 cents net.

The House of Bondage

By REGINALD WRIGHT KAUFFMAN

Our greatest difficulty at present is to keep THE HOUSE OF BONDAGE in stock. For example: on Saturday, after receiving what we considered would be sufficient books for some time, three telegrams came from the Pacific Coast, each ordering, in addition to orders already placed, over 100 more. One large New York dealer telephoned for 250 copies at nine o'clock, increased his order to 500 at 10 o'clock and at noon to 1000.

We believe there are a few dealers (a very few) who have not heard of THE HOUSE OF BONDAGE, and what the book means. Those we wish to acquaint with the opinions of some people and papers that count:

EDWIN MARKHAM writes:

"A book that disturbs, that flashes light, that will not let you rest. . . . A book that blurs the eyes and stirs the heart with the pity of it. With nobility of manner, with a sincerity that touches the subject as with fire, in a purity that burns away all impurity, Mr. Kauffman relates this story."

JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER, Jr., writes, in part:

"I have read 'The House of Bondage' with much interest. The story is inexpressibly sad, but sadder still is the knowledge that it is true to life—true not only in the exceptional case, but in hundreds and doubtless thousands of cases.

"The author has handled a difficult subject with the utmost of delicacy consistent with perfect frankness. While telling his story fearlessly, he does so without sensationalism. I believe that the conditions with which the book deals must be generally known before they will be improved, and that the publicity thus given them will be of great value."

THE BOSTON EVENING TRANSCRIPT says:

"It is safe to say that this novel will be more effective than if it were a portentous sociological treatise. It carries on every page an impress of the truth. . . . A triumph of knowledge and artistic sense."

"I WISH I COULD FORGET THIS NOVEL. BUT IT IS NOT POSSIBLE. ITS WAILING CRY IN THE NIGHT RINGS OUT LIKE THE NEVER CEASING SOBBING TOLL OF A GHOSTLY BELL"—Portland Oregonian.

ROWLAND THOMAS, Critic, writes in "Colliers":

"The book itself we are moved to recommend to the reading of every man and woman and boy, and especially of every girl, in these United States. Such modest limit we set for the present to the carrying power of our voice."

THE CONGREGATIONALIST says:

"It is a terrible tale, but it should be read by thoughtful people. There is nothing in it to please the evil-minded. It is profoundly moral, but awful, written with a sincere purpose to open the eyes of men and women to the horror of the situation."

"It may help to save many a young and promising life."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

"It is a book for the thoughtful, not for the careless reader. If it were not for its sincerity, no words could be too strong for voicing its condemnation."—Brooklyn Eagle.

"The novel is artistically, cleanly and beautifully written. Mr. Kauffman gave much pains and unusual talent to a noble purpose."—Hartford Courant.

WILLIAM D. BANCKER

The Prodigal Judge is certainly well named and very cleverly written. I was intensely interested in it from start to finish. It is a very fine book.

DAYTON DRY GOODS CO.

The Prodigal Judge is one of the most thoroughly alive stories I have ever read. I never had more real pleasure from a single book. I am sure the book will sell and I hope to see the sales exceed all your expectations.

HERBERT N. CROSBY

DeWolfe & Fiske Co., Boston, Mass.

The Prodigal Judge is the best book of its kind since "The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come" and I see no reason why it should not have a tremendous sale and I shall do all in my power to make it so.

F. G. ORR

The Prodigal Judge takes high rank among the best of recent literature.

What Booksellers are saying about

THE PRODIGAL JUDGE

In addition to our five pages of booksellers' comments printed last week

WILLIAM VAN SITTERT

The Burrows Bros. Co., Cleveland, Ohio.

When I took up The Prodigal Judge it was like an expectation of meeting with another yarn of the thin, crude nature with which we are these days almost swamped. The reading of the first few pages corrected this feeling, and showed this to be a brightly written work. From the first introduction of the characters to the end of the volume, no one's hope of finding here a book of unusual interest will be disappointed. The peculiar and amusing vanity of the Judge, struggling with his failing, and exposing at the same time an underlying vein of affection and tenderness is a character we cannot help being interested in, and like some of those of Dickens, Hopkinson Smith and Ian Maclaren is one we will not wish to forget. We bear with his infirmities and rejoice at his final self-assertion and triumph. I have been calling the attention of my customers, including librarians, to the book, and we'll do all we can to boom the sale here.

S. G. MANNSCHRECK

W. Schroeder, St. Joseph, Mo.

Have just finished reading The Prodigal Judge and enjoyed it immensely. It is a very strong book and certainly expect it to be on top in the list of best sellers. Will try my best to put it there.

A. W. MacCORQUODALE

A. C. McClurg & Co., Chicago, Ill.

The Prodigal Judge is a great book and I am sure it will have a large and steady sale. The Judge certainly is unique and ought to be elevated to the "Supreme Bench" as one of the most striking characters in American fiction.

WALTER PETTIBONE

Robert Clarke & Company, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Once in a while as booksellers, we get the chance to recommend to our customers a good novel, one that makes one better for having read it. The Prodigal Judge is such a novel.

University Square Indianapolis — The Bobbs-Merrill Company, Publishers — Union Square New York

NEW YORK SUN

The tale is an intricate one, skilfully interwoven with plots and mysteries.

THE CHICAGO JOURNAL

For a good story, well told, for vivid scenes, for the number and excellence of character paintings, for that wideness of human horizons that it produces in the mind of its reader, The Prodigal Judge is a big book.

THE DIAL

Mark Twain could hardly have made a better use of the material.

ROCHESTER UNION & ADVERTISER

In The Prodigal Judge, Vaughan Kester gives ample evidence that as a writer of American fiction, he is in the front rank.

NASHVILLE BANNER

In the line of intense dramatic significance, there are few finer things in all the range of fiction than two chapters in this book.

CINCINNATI ENQUIRER

One finds in The Prodigal Judge tragedy of the deepest and comedy of the most mirth-provoking. It is indeed a remarkable book.

MINNEAPOLIS JOURNAL

It leaves in the heart a glow of fine feeling and genial humor. It bears re-reading with gain of interest. But to say all this gives little idea of the story's peculiar charm.

BOSTON HERALD

The Prodigal Judge has a distinct claim to the attention of readers of fiction. It grips and carries one along relentlessly. It charms with its humor and stirs with its thrilling episodes.

What the Reviewers are saying about

THE PRODIGAL JUDGE

The novel by VAUGHAN KESTER

Illustrated by BRACKER. $1.25 net

THE NEW YORK TIMES

The reader closes The Prodigal Judge feeling that human nature is, after all, a lovable thing; grateful beyond words to Mr. Kester for his sane and healthful romance, which is not only a spring of refreshing enjoyment, but proves that a writer may be decent without losing strength, and ought to leave its readers with wider sympathies, softer hearts, a larger tolerance.

TWENTIETH CENTURY MAGAZINE

The Prodigal Judge is a big story; perhaps it is not too much to say that it is the best American novel of the year.

PHILADELPHIA PRESS

To the group of representative American novels, which includes the earlier works of Mark Twain, "The Virginian" and "Hugh Wynne," Vaughan Kester contributes The Prodigal Judge.

PITTSBURG LEADER

Given strong, human characters, a story that seizes upon and holds attention, a natural wit and plentiful scenery, The Prodigal Judge is real literature. It is a great book, both in the sense of the author's ability to create and in the power of his creations to entertain.

PITTSBURG POST

To those who have long awaited some flash of that genius with which Dickens touched and thrilled the heart, to those who have sighed for the art of Hawthorne, whose subtle pen entranced the reading world, the work of Vaughan Kester suggests a new era and in them hope revives.

The pungent wit, keen satire and irresistible humor recall Mark Twain at his best. The rollicking characters furnish pages worthy of Dickens.

With exquisite diction and a graceful, limpid style, Vaughan Kester has woven a rare fabric to drape a splendid creature of his brain.

The John C. Winston Company will publish on April 10 John Trotwood Moore's "Jack Ballington, Forester," a story concerned with the fortunes of Jack Ballington, who on account of his gentle life and apparent lack of fighting qualities seems in danger of losing both his heritage and the girl he loves. Alexander, L: C., ed.

The autobiography of Shakespeare; a fragment. N. Y., Baker & T., ['11.] (Ap8) c. 176 p. O. $1.50 n.

This book assumes that William Shakespeare, the dramatist, is constantly confused with his cousin William, son of John of Stratford, a wastrel, poacher, stroller and soldier. The dramatist was the son of Richard of Warwick, who changed his name from Little to Shakespeare. The conflicting stories about Shakespeare's early life are caused also because there were several Richard Shakespeares in the vicinity, four of whom had sons named William. The dramatist married Anne Hathaway after his cousin, the dissolute William, her husband, had died, for he had had a contractual marriage with her. From the editing of all these confusing incidents the author has written a plain and simple series of facts as to Shakespeare's life.

Bain, Fs. W:

The ashes of a god; tr. from the original manuscript by F. W. Bain. N. Y., Putnam, '11. (Ap8) c. 23+152 p. front. O. $1.25 n.

The chronicle of one who, having met with a blighting experience in early manhood, turns his back upon the world and for a long span of years practices the most rigid asceticism. How the promised meed of all these years of piety and deprivation is snatched from him the reader will wish to learn for himself as he pursues the story of this old hermit, the austerity of whose resolve stands in contrast with the sensuous richness of thought and language with which the tale is enveloped. By the author of "A digit of the moon."

The human machine. N. Y., Doran, ['11.] (Ap8) 123 p. D. 75 c. n.

Another book on the order of "How to live on 24 hours a day." In this, however, instead of devoting his whimsicalities and wit in expounding how time can best be spent, he devotes the pages to considering the conservation of the energies of the "human machine," that life may thereby be made more livable. He believes in making the will master of the brain, and in no way letting the brain master the will—a condition always resulting in friction and discontent. The whole is a plea for an intellectual comprehension of oneself, as one may understand a third person.

Bent, Allen H.

In this work two hundred and eighty-five books and pamphlets and nearly three hundred magazine articles are listed, all of which have something to say of the White Mountains. Of the magazine articles one-third appeared in Appalachia, the journal of the Appalachian Mountain Club, founded in 1876. Some one hundred and fifty poems, fifty newspapers that have at various times been published in White Mountain towns, thirty-six maps and an imperfect list of early engravings are also recorded.

Bergson, Henri Louis.

Creative evolution; author. tr. by Arth. Mitchell. N. Y., Holt, '11. (Ap8) c. 15+407 p. O. $2.50 n.

This translation has been subject to the author's revision. He is a member of the Institute; professor at the College de France. This work is rather a philosophy of evolution than a merely scientific attitude toward the subject. Following the idea that "our intellect . . . is intended to secure the perfect fitting of our body to its environment" the author logically works this line of thought out. The manner in which he does this is best shown by giving the chapter headings; Evolution of life—mechanism and teleology; Divergent directions of the evolution of life—torpor, intelligence, instinct; On the meaning of life—the order of nature and the form of intelligence; Cinematographical mechanism of thought and the mechanistic illusion—a glance at the history of systems—real becoming and false evolutionism. Index.

A story of England just after Monmouth's Rebellion, while Judge Jeffries was still holding his "bloody assizes." Katharine Clanranald dons man's attire and on a lonely road holds up a king's messenger and robs him of the death warrant for her father. She does it in right manly fashion and then in most womanly fashion falls in love with him. Together they face Jeffries, defy the king, and by the narrowest of margins, win their way to Holland.

Combe, Mrs. Kenneth.

Seekers all. N. Y., Doran, '11. (Ap8) 323 p. D. $1.20 n.

By the author of "Cecilia Kirkham's son." This is a story of present-day English life. Barbara Lister's mother having been married for her money, determines that a like fate shall not befall her daughter, and therefore leaves her fortune in such a way that Barbara appears dependent on her stepfather's bounty. The girl's two love affairs, one with a charming but selfish army officer, and the other with his splendid halfbrother, form the chief incidents of the story. The mercenary cousins with whom Barbara lives are amusingly drawn.

Cree, Rev. E. D.

Pre-Christian teaching. N. Y., Macmillan, '11. (Ap8) 13+83 p. 12°, 80 c. n.

The object of this little work is to show, by a few specimens, how far ethical teachers used to go in instructing mankind before they had the message of divine revelation to help them. The author considers several contributions from Grecian literature, partly because Greece is more representative of humanity than any other country, and so had higher ideals of the capacities and perfectability of mankind; and partly because such poems claim a high position, even as literature, and must in their day have influenced considerably the moral and religious sentiments of the people. The authors of these poems had a conviction that their special talent for poetry called on them to make good use of it in the cause of virtue and brotherly kindness, when the powers of evil were strong and aggressive.

Origin and evolution of ethics; were moral laws supernaturally revealed, or are they products of human experience and evolution? Los Angeles, Cal., [S. W. Davis, 854 E. 54th St.,] '10, ['11.] (Ap8) 161 p. O. pap., 50 c.

A study of the ancient sages, the Stoics, Epicureans, mediæval scholastics and modern philosophers brings the author to the conclusion that our moral ideas are solely the result of human experience through the centuries, and that happiness is the summum bonum of existence. He believes, however, that in order to secure this greatest good we are "in duty bound" to promote morality and abridge crime, teach ethics and cultivate habits of good conduct. Mr. Davis has written "The scientific dispensation," "A future life," etc., and is editor of the Humanitarian Review.

The volume works up to the invention of opera in the last decade of the 16th century, in the successful achievements of Peri and Caccini. Index.

Keith, Marian.

'Lizbeth of the Dale. N. Y., Doran, ['11.] (Ap8) c. '10. 7-434 p. D. $1.20.

An entertaining story of a maiden aunt of ancient lineage and old-world traditions who finds herself the head of eight nieces and nephews in an old stone house called the Dale in Ontario, Canada. Her brother is a gentle, absent-minded student without the force and sternness of his Scotch sister, Miss Gordon. The eight Gordons have a jolly life together and there seems only one serious problem among them and that is the third daughter, 'Lizbeth of the Dale. She has a regrettable streak in her of the "fighting MacDonalds," the scandal of a country side, and the "wild MacDuffs." Elizabeth cries over this mixture in herself and tries in vain to mould herself on the lines of propriety. By the author of "Treasure Valley," "Duncan Polite," etc.

He is a likable, lovable little fellow, the little-known husband of a well-known actress wife. Overshadowed by circumstances, overshadowed by his wife, overshadowed by New York, he believes himself no good and yet before the story is finished the reader finds the little man far from a nonentity, and even capable of drawing a pistol on a typical New Yorker.

Mach, Ernst.

History and root of the principle of the conservation of energy; tr. from the German and annotated by Philip E. B. Jourdain. Chic., Open Court, '11. (Ap8) c. '10. 116 p. D. $1.25 n.

He obeys—because there is no other thing to do—and his obedience leads him to deep plots against the Russian government. Through his love of the scientist's daughter, a wealthy young American is also entangled in the intrigues, which center about a Russian treasure ship which was sunk in the Baltic Sea by revolutionists, and which both revolutionists and government are seeking to recover. This is the first long serial selected to introduce Adventure, the new magazine brought out by the publishers of Everybody's. Certainly adventures follow thick and fast in this story of a man who stumbled on an inventory of a Spanish treasure ship which was lost three hundred years ago, and who is drugged and robbed of the inventory and then shanghaied. More thrills and excitement come with the experiences of the hero aboard a ship manned by a Chinese crew and captained by one Bessie, who consents to go on the search for treasure. Out of two parties of seekers only three live to tell the tale, which is surely one of action, plot and counterplot. By the author of "The voice in the rice."

This picturesque royal author has given the world a unique series of impressions of her friends, and of her wide experience of men and affairs. In her preface she tells her readers: "I am about to throw open the sanctuary I have so long jealously guarded from the world—the private chapel within whose niches my memories are enshrined. Those to whom I pay constant tribute of love and gratitude were either the idols of my early youth or the friends of riper years. I shall try to show them as they appeared to me on earth, in every varying aspect, according to season and circumstance, and to the changes of my own mood and habits of thought during the different stages of my mental development."

Phillpotts, Eden.

Demeter's daughter. N. Y., J: Lane, '11. (Ap8) c. 348 p. D. $1.35 n.

This book, one of many written by the author on Dartmoor life, takes its title from the goddess of Greek mythology, Demeter, who stands for the protection of social order and of marriage. Alison Cleaves, who is likened to Demeter's daughter, has run away in her youth and married a man to whom her parents and friends were all opposed, Aaron Cleaves. They have five children, only one of whom, Frank, is like his mother in industry and the upholding of law and justice. He dies in war. Her son Giles and her daughter Joyce are both warring natures to her own, but most of all her husband's character is in antithesis to her. It is in all a revelation of a staunch, strong uncomplaining woman who is loyal to every circumstance of her life, and whose death in a flood ends a life which has been too filled with sorrow.

Redmond-Howard, L. G.

John Redmond, the man and the demand; a biographical study in Irish politics; with 9 il., including a photogravure plate. N. Y., J: Lane, '11. (Ap8) 15+351 p. O. $3.50 n.

This book is intended more as a presentation of the Irish problem than as a personal character sketch. In this "last phase" of Irish politics Mr. John Redmond seems to be the man who makes the situation most clear, hence the reason for his biography. By descent he was a Wexford Irishman from the days the Normans landed on Irish shores and Wexford was a half-Danish seaport. By the Act of Settlement they lost their ancestral castle through allegiance to their faith, and the family has many traditions of loyalty and love for Ireland. It seems natural then that a man who had sprung from such stock should have done for his country politically what he has done, and by his moderation and common-sense given the dignity to the Irish question which he has won for it. "To the few years of practical experience in Home Rule, John Redmond appeals for a justification of his proposals; it is to a century of the reversal of that policy he points as the condemnation of its continuance." Index.

By the author of "The brass bowl," etc. On a certain sultry morning there were residing in New York among four and a half million other people, a witty and clever old woman, who had made name, fame and fortune on Fifth Avenue, a pretty, charming girl named Cynthia, who had come to New York to seek occupation and certainly found it, a handsome young fellow who knows enough to fall violently in love with the right girl, and a very red-faced, red-haired man, who might properly bear the label "dangerous." On this morning they are all strangers, and within two days they are together on an outward-bound steamship. And what a voyage that is, what a drama of adventure, of secret treachery and unexpected heroism, of love-making and villany, right to the words, "the end."

THE NEW YORK STATE LIBRARY FIRE AND THE BOOKSELLER.

ONE of the most interesting things about the newspaper reports of the appallingly disastrous and utterly inexcusable fire which wrecked a large part of the New York State Capitol early last week Wednesday was the comparative lack of emphasis placed by the various correspondents on the loss of the State Library, which was housed in the western wing of the Capitol. Probably the whole Capitol, magnificent though it was, might far better have been destroyed utterly, rather than the library, with its priceless book and manuscript treasures. Yet in the first published accounts of the fire the loss of the library was not mentioned at all; and in the final accounts it received one line of comment where the papier-maché ceiling of the Assembly Chambers received ten. The comparison would seem to reflect a very general public ignorance regarding library matters.

As a matter of fact the New York State Library was one of the great libraries of the world, the fifth largest in this country, and with collections on education, genealogy and law that were perhaps unrivalled. According to Commissioner Draper, two million dollars would hardly replace the hundreds of thousands of volumes that can be replaced; the manuscript documents, including the complete records of the early New York Colony, and the other unique items of the splendid collection are, of course, an irreparable loss.

Just as the Congressional Library is a national library which long since outgrew its name, so was the New York State Library originally a legislative library which long since, mainly under the long, stormy but far-sighted and enthusiastic direction of Melvil Dewey, had outgrown its original purpose and had become truly a "State Library."

Even those newspapers which mentioned the library at all spoke of it as "a room on the third floor," in apparent ignorance of the fact that this original library room had been of late years merely the reference reading room of the library, and that the 600,000 books, 300,000 manuscripts and 400,000 pamphlets of the library had long ago overflowed into literally a hundred rooms and nooks and crannies through the whole west end of the enormous Capitol building. There were in fact no less than nine floor levels in the library section, each with many rooms, and every one absolutely crammed with books, for the library has for years been crying for more space.

Of course such conditions invited a disastrous fire. That the building carried no insurance whatever and, if the newspaper accounts are to be believed, that the main portion was absolutely without fire protection, seems almost criminally negligent. Certainly the library section was provided with fire protection, for the danger of fire was there realized. Mr. Dewey, and his successors in their annual reports, have reiterated in the most urgent terms the dangerous condition of the library and the need of more adequate fire protection.

The disaster is truly an unfortunate one to American bibliography and letters. The fact that the Library, and the Educational Department of which it was a part, would, within a few months, have moved into a splendid new building of its own makes its present loss particularly distressing.

THE Albany disaster is not without its lessons to the booktrade. Books are inflammable substances, and the usual wooden shelving of the average bookstore is nothing more or less than kindling conveniently arranged for the rapid spread of fire. With these conditions existing three or four directions are obvious:

FIRST: Carry fire insurance sufficient to cover your loss, in as reputable companies as you can get to take the risk. Unfortunately some fire insurance companies are little better than swindlers, taking risks without investigation and, after fires, seizing every chance to evade the settlement of losses. It is therefore very much worth your while to investigate the financial standing and commercial reputation of the companies behind your policies. Don't leave it to your agent to do this; some of the largest agencies are astonishingly negligent in looking out for the interests of their clients. Read carefully all the fine print, "riders" and "exceptions" to your policies, and try to conform to its multifarious provisions.

SECOND: Have means of fire protection immediately available; in every fire it is the first minute that counts. An automatic sprinkler system, if your building is equipped with one, is excellent against fire; but unfortunately in a bookstore water will do about as much damage as fire. Standpipe connections are next best. For first protection some one of the chemical extinguishers give the best all around service. The dry powder types cause the least damage in themselves, but a bookstore fire would very quickly get away from them. See that whatever apparatus you have—standpipe, hose or extinguisher—is kept in order, ready for use, and that your clerks know where it is and how to handle it. A fire drill is an excellent precaution.

THIRD: Avoid chance for fire by keeping rubbish cleaned up—everywhere, and particularly in the dark corners. See that your electric wiring is run in conduits, and that steam pipes are asbestos-covered where passing through woodwork. Make it a habit to be on the lookout against conditions inviting fire—gas lights swinging against woodwork, choked chimney flues, temporary electric "decorations," etc. A fire, nine cases out of ten, is a serious calamity, not to be measured entirely by the stock lost either.

IN an important decision handed down Monday afternoon in the case of the Miles Medical Company (manufacturers of proprietary medicine) vs. the James D. Park Company (jobbers), the Supreme Court of the United States ruled strongly against the contract system by which the Miles Medical Company has sought in the past to prevent wholesalers and retailers from selling goods made by it to other retailers who would dispose of them at cut rates to buyers. It decided on broad grounds, and practically unanimously, that such contracts were in restraint of trade, illegal and therefore void.

Justice Hughes, who wrote the decision, prefaced it, however, by distinctly excepting it from the patent law, to the protection of which the Miles Medical Company had made no claim. This case, said Justice Hughes, "lies outside the policy of the patent law, and the extent of the right which that law secures is not here involved or determined."

This decision has therefore no bearing upon pending cases of contract involving patented, or analogous copyrighted, productions.

SYSTEMATIZED BUYING.*

IN my discussion of "Systematized Buying" I propose to treat the subject from the viewpoint of the retail merchant; the man who is conducting a business of average dimensions.

I shall not confine my remarks to the domain of the buyer, but shall take the liberty of entering a few of the channels leading from or up to his office, making such suggestions as I think may be helpful.

I shall speak largely from my own experience, and while I am conscious that what I have to say will fall short of interesting a great many of my hearers, who are now employing as good or better systems in their buying departments, I hope to be able to outline a few simple rules which can be profitably followed by those whose house organizations have not yet reached their full development.

The business of merchandising consists of buying and selling goods.

Any system of buying to be successful must have the co-operation of the sales department. The relations between the two departments are so close as to make their interests practically the same. The buyer should endeavor to confine his purchases to goods which the experience of the sales manager teaches him are salable, and the sales department should lend its best efforts to unloading the buyer's mistakes.

STOCK RECORDS NECESSARY.

To preserve a correct equilibrium in judgment between the two authorities, a set of stock records is an absolute necessity provided it is the desire of the firm—as it should be—to maintain the maximum of efficiency upon a minimum investment.

This record may consist of one or more bound books, a loose-leaf binder containing a series of leaves, or a set of indexed cards, as may seem the most convenient and practical to the interested parties. The simpler the arrangement, the better. The trouble with most systems is their complexity. The busy man finds it difficult to devote the time needed to keep his records up-to-date.

In the stock record a sufficient amount of space should be assigned to each and every line of goods carried in stock, no matter how small and insignificant some of these lines may be. Every buyer will admit that it is the small, miscellaneous items which give him the most trouble.

The record of each line of stock should contain the name and address of the manufacturer making the goods, the name and address of the local agent or travelling representative of such manufacturer, the shipping instructions, an itemized list of such items in the line as are carried in stock, and—if a separate set of cost books is not kept by the buyer—the costs and terms.

* [An address delivered at the Baltimore Stationers' Convention last winter by Fletcher B. Gibbs. It seemed so able and practical a presentation of the difficult subject of buying, from the booksellers' as well as the stationers' point of view, that only lack of space has prevented our reprinting it before now. —ED. P. W.]

The leaves or cards should be ruled with a series of double vertical columns—with box headings for dates—in one of which columns should be recorded the goods on hand at the time an order is placed, and in the other, the goods ordered; using different colors of ink for the two classes of entries.

VALUE OF SUCH STOCK RECORDS.

No firm can fail to recognize the reference value of a set of stock records such as I have described. If a buyer does not already possess one, and is disposed to be candid, he will confess his daily need of such an invaluable help to his work, and will doubtless state that while it has been his intention to compile such a record, he has been unable to find time to devote to the work.

If a buyer will keep tab on the time that he daily loses in searching through the office files for information and authorities which should be matters of record within reach of his hand, I will venture to state that within sixty days the total time thus employed will be found to have been amply sufficient to have completed the coveted record.

The object of this record, aside from its reference value, is to indicate the goods which are moving. It aids the buyer in determining the amounts of his purchases; it enables him to keep his stock complete and at the same time within reasonable limits. Frequent study of its pages will enable him to weed out goods which are shown to be unsalable and to increase his orders for those goods which are moving, thus increasing the efficiency of his stock without enlarging the investment.

The record of a year's purchases will enable him to determine the amount of each salable item it is desirable to have at all times in stock, and if he so desires, those amounts can be entered in the respective stock lists in some distinctive color of ink, when any boy in the office can make up an order by comparing the stock clerk's report of goods on hand with the amounts which the record indicate should be carried in the shelves.

STOCK RECORDS USEFUL ALSO IN SALES DEPARTMENT.

While a set of stock records is absolutely essential to any system of correct buying, it will be found equally useful to the sales department. References will be made to it every hour in the day to ascertain the quantities of certain items carried in stock in view of prospective orders.

Its value as a monitor in safeguarding the buyer's propensity to overstock items seemingly in demand because occasionally called for will be appreciated by the manufacturer, to whom so many appeals are now made to take back or exchange unsalable goods.

STOCK CLERK.

In the performane of his work the buyer will find the assistance of a well trained stock clerk of inestimable value. It is his duty to receive and care for the stock, and upon the efficiency with which this is done will depend very largely the ease with which the buyer's duties will be accomplished.

Occasionally an experienced stock clerk can be engaged, but more frequently he has to be trained to his work. A great deal depends upon his care and vigilance. A careless stock clerk can cost his employer many times the amount of his salary. He receives and distributes all incoming goods consigned to his department of the business, whether delivered by messenger, mail or express, or turned over from the receiving room.

NEED OF CENTRAL RECEIVING ROOM.

And here I will ask permission to digress for a moment while emphasizing the necessity of a central receiving room in every establishment embracing more than one department, to which can be directed all bulky goods coming into the house, and from which their distribution can be made after their receipt has been properly recorded and the correct weights compared with those entered in the freight expense bills.

The cases turned over by the receiving room to the department stock clerk are opened by him or by a clerk under his supervision and the contents checked with the invoices or orders. A sufficient amount of floor space should be assigned to this work in which it can be expeditiously and methodically done; a space that shall be inviolate from trespass and from which it will be thoroughly understood by every clerk and salesman in the establishment that no goods are to be removed except by requisition on the stock clerk. This will result in fewer complaints of shortages, as many alleged shortages are undoubtedly due to the removal of goods—for the purpose of filling orders—before the stock clerk has had an opportunity to properly check his invoices.

CHECK INVOICES WITH ORDERS AS WELL AS GOODS.

After the goods have been checked with the invoices the latter should be checked with the orders, or vice versa.

After entering upon the invoices the amount of the freight and drayage charges paid upon the shipment, and attaching thereto—in a blank provided for the purpose—a detailed history of anything that is wrong with the shipment, all papers should be sent to the buyer's office, where the prices and extensions are checked and any necessary correspondence conducted with the shippers.

The latter can facilitate the work of both the stock clerk and buyer by rendering a separate invoice for each individual order. I do not mean a separate bill for each page of an order consisting of several sheets mailed under the same date, but a series of orders mailed upon successive dates and forwarded in one shipment. The most annoying and difficult shipment to check through is that in which goods ordered by two separate departments are shipped in the same case and billed upon a single invoice. Until opening the mail the question immediatly arises as to which department the invoice shall be assigned. A situation may subsequently develop where the goods arrive and are held by one department while the invoice is in the possession of the other, and while one is writing for a bill the other is requesting to have the goods traced. And finally, after this complication has been straightened out, the invoice has to be passed back and forth between the two departments, while the goods are being checked, and the total of the invoice separated into the different amounts which are to be charged to the stock accounts of the respective departments.

THE CARE OF STOCK.

The stock clerk should be held responsible for the care of stock. He should recognize the economical advantage of seeing that all incoming goods are properly packed or wrapped before being placed in the shelves; that the entire stock is at all times kept in a clean and orderly condition, and the shelves, counters and showcases in presentable shape.

As the care of stock was exhaustively covered at the last convention, I will not attempt to further describe this part of the stock clerk's work.

His most important duty is to watch the stock with a view to reporting to the buyer's office the necessity for renewals, and in this he has ample opportunities to display his efficiency.

KEEPING GOODS "IN STOCK."

Next to the work of creating a demand for the goods, the greatest problem in any merchandising business is to have the goods in stock to satisfy the demand when made. The difficulty of its solution increases with the merchant's distance from the source of supply.

It does not suffice to reorder goods when completely sold out; the time when the supply of any particular item is likely to be exhausted must be anticipated and the stock restored to normal proportions.

"WANT BOOK."

There are a number of ways in which the stock clerk can be assisted in the performance of this branch of his work. There can be kept upon his desk in a conspicuous position the time-honored "Want-Book," in which the order clerks and floor salesmen are instructed to enter such goods as are found to be low or entirely out; there can be furnished to each and every member of the order and sales force a supply of printed blanks in which to enter any item for which an order of unusual quantity has been filled. Such report to be filed on the stock clerk's desk.

Every customer's order, whether received through the mails or the floor or city salesmen, should pass the inspection of the sales manager or other responsible person for a variety of reasons not directly connected with the subject under discussion; and as an added precaution these orders as they pass in review should be carefully scanned for items calculated to deplete the stock.

When the necessity arises for renewing one or more items in a line of goods the stock clerk should be required to make an inventory of the complete line upon a ruled and printed blank provided for the purpose. After entering the quantity of each item in stock he should turn to the stock record and copy therefrom the quantity of each on hand when the previous record was made and the amount of each ordered in the meantime.

This report, together with any necessary memoranda relative to any particular item needed in a hurry for the purpose of filling a customer's order, should be placed upon the buyer's desk.

STAPLE LINES.

Certain classes of stock should be watched more closely and ordered more frequently than others; these include the staple items for which there is the most frequent demand and of which we have to carry the largest quantities, and that long list of small miscellaneous items, only occasionally called for and of which we carry only skeleton stocks. The two extremes.

Lists of various lines of stock included in these two classes should be turned in by the stock clerk upon fixed dates separated only by short intervals.

If renewals are not forced by exigency, the rest of the stock can be safely left to such times as the establishment is favored by calls from the salesmen representing the various lines.

SALESMEN SHOULD SEND ADVANCE NOTICES.

Every salesman should mail advance cards. As soon as an advance card is received it should be referred to the stock clerk with instructions to promptly supply the buyer—upon the usual blank—with a report of the condition of the stock which such salesman represents. The buyer can then have that salesman's order ready for him when he arrives, thus giving the latter the time and opportunity to spend his expense money on something besides hotel accommodations and shoe leather. . . .

ONE BUYER FOR ONE THING.

No store should have more than one buyer purchasing the same kind of stock. By this I mean that it is a mistake to have two or more men buying the same class of goods and acting independently of each other. If the sales manager, stock clerk or other employee be privileged to issue what are commonly termed "pick-up" orders for emergency items, it is advisable to have such orders countersigned or O. K.'d by the buyer. Not that the ability or trustworthiness of the other man is held in question, but to enable the buyer to make note of goods frequently called for that are not carried in stock, and with a judgment born of experience, to be certain that the order in hand has been directed to the most available source of supply.

VERBAL ORDERS.

Avoid placing verbal orders. If for any reason it becomes necessary, send a confirming order by the same day's mail. This applies also to orders placed by telephone or telegraph.

ORDER BLANKS.

Use duplicate order blanks. Make the form as decorative as may be dictated by individual taste, but condense the printed directions into as few words as possible. All orders should be numbered consecutively in duplicate.

It will be found a convenience to have several different forms:

One for the emergency orders mentioned in a previous paragraph, which we will call "pick-up" order blanks:

One for stock goods which are to be shipped from factory to the store, which we will call "regular" order blanks, and

One for goods which are to be shipped from factory direct to customer, which we will term "direct" order blanks.

Each of the forms mentioned should carry a distinctive line of order numbers as an aid for ready identification when an order is quoted by letter, telegram or otherwise.

"PICK-UP" ORDERS.

The "pick-up" orders are for daily emergency purchases. They are either filled or cancelled within 24 hours. The cancelled orders and the invoices covering the goods delivered on filled orders should be checked each day in the office with the carbon duplicates. If the goods which have been obtained on the filled orders are such as are regularly carried in stock they should be entered upon the stock record.

If these "pick-up" orders are being signed and placed by employees outside of the buyer's office, and independent of the buyer's supervision, a weak point is being developed in the buying system, especially if the goods thus ordered are not being entered upon the stock records.

All bills should be paid promptly when due. If there is a discount for cash in ten days, the invoice should not be retained in the buyer's office so long as to render it impossible for the accounting department to take advantage of the cash discount.

Be concise in correspondence. Use simple language and direct terms. By avoiding the correspondence school style of dictation, a large percentage of the work on the typewriting machine can be saved and the stenographer's time used with profit for other purposes.

CATALOGUES AND PRICE LISTS.

In a previous paragraph relative to the use of care in itemizing orders, I spoke of referring to the catalogues or lists of manufacturers.

Outside of his cost books and stock records, the buyer has no more valuable asset in his office than his library of catalogues and price lists, and if he has not already done so, he should lose no time in providing a suitable cabinet in which these lists can be filed for ready reference. In these days of sectional office furniture a cabinet occupying a very small amount of space can be assembled to conveniently accommodate any kind of an assortment of catalogues.

Every catalogue, circular and price list which reaches the office should be retained and filed, provided they pertain to goods in any way related to the business.

When a new edition of a catalogue or list is filed the old one should be invariably destroyed.

CLIPPING TRADE ADVERTISING.

If the house subscribe to one or more of the trade papers, an office assistant should be trained to review each week's copy and blue pencil or cut out the new advertisements, and these should be either filed the same as the printed lists or the advertisers should be written for their printed literature relative to the goods advertised.

The time-saving and educational value of a complete and systematically filed library of catalogues and price lists is beyond price, and filing systems as applied to house catalogues is a topic which could be interestingly and profitably discussed at some future convention. . . .

QUALIFICATIONS OF THE EFFECTIVE BUYER.

It has been suggested that I describe the qualifications which would entitle their successor to be regarded as an efficient buyer, but I am not equal to the attempt. It may be accepted as certain, however, that if all buyers were in the same class that variety of experience which lends spice to the travelling man's round of pleasure would be absent.

Most buyers entertain ideas; a few possess definite aims. The former digs through the day's disorganized work with hopeful cheerfulness while futilely dreaming visions of orderliness; the wage slave of driving necessity.

The latter, realizing that the amount of work which any one man can do is a trifle, has learned to cultivate a latent executive ability and through the aid of system to so plan his daily toil as to achieve the inner joy and meaning of laboring for the pure love of labor.

ADVANTAGE OF SYSTEM IN BUYING.

While I do not claim that the system of buying which I have described is by any means perfect, it is one which has enabled our company to restrict its purchases to so well defined an average as to cause our annual inventory of stock to vary from year to year less than five per cent. and at the same time to give our customers a service that they claim is yielded by few of the houses with whom they deal.

To adapt the system to the needs of those firms who may have been interested in my discussion, it will be necessary to enlarge or modify it to meet individual requirements.

CREDIT TO THE TRAVELLING SALESMAN.

No discussion of a system of buying could be considered complete without a more extended reference to the travelling salesman.

It is he who has educated the buyer. In the course of years he has imparted so complete a fund of information to the buyer as to entitle many of the members of the traveling fraternity to be regarded as high school masters in the school of commerce.

Many buyers have obtained from this source the major part of their knowledge of goods, which has enabled them to satisfactorily perform the duties of their position. Few, comparatively speaking, have had the advantage of that invaluable post-graduate course which consists of visiting the factories and actually seeing the goods made. We must therefore take off our hat to the travelling salesman and the buyer who fails to greet him with the "glad hand" and a "welcome-to-our-city" smile may be losing a golden opportunity to add to his store of information. . . .

A situation might develop where a certain line of goods might be continuously reordered from local dealers at local jobbing prices without the stock records indicating to the buyer that the goods were in the slightest demand.

"REGULAR" ORDERS.

After a "regular" order for goods to be shipped from the factory to the store has been made out, and the proper entries of the items therein contained made in the stock record, the carbon copy, with the stock clerk's report attached thereto, should be filed in a temporary file containing only "live" orders.

This file should be gone through at least once a week by the buyer's assistant and a follow-up letter or "chaser" sent after orders known to be overdue.

"SHORTS."

When the goods have been received and the order with the checked invoice returned to the buyer's office, all items which for any reason have not been shipped should be transferred to a "short memorandum." This list of shorts, besides containing the name and address of the manufacturer and any other necessary information, should be endorsed with the number and date of the original order and take the place of such order in the temporary file, together with carbon copies of any correspondence relative thereto. The original order can then be permanently filed.

Whenever a new order is written, reference should unfailingly be made to the temporary file and the manufacturer's attention called to any items which a short order memorandum indicates the shipper failed to forward on a previous order.

The carbon copy of an order addressed to the jobber or manufacturer for goods on a "direct" order blank which are to be shipped direct from factory to customer's address should be attached to the customer's order, remain with it in the unfilled customer's order file until the transaction has been closed, when it finally accompanies the customer's order to the permanent file. Previous to the copy leaving the buyer's office the goods ordered should be entered upon the stock record.

GOODS MANUFACTURED BY THE HOUSE.

Stock goods which are made in the firm's own factory should be ordered in exactly the same manner as though the order were placed with an outside house. The order should be written with equal care, the items definitely specified and entered in due course upon the stock record.

Use care in writing orders. If necessary, refer to the stock record for the correct name and full address of the firm for whom the order is intended. If there is any doubt relative to the correct descriptions of the items to be ordered refer to the manufacturer's catalogue or list. Endless confusion and loss of time can be saved by this latter precaution. Unless the order be addressed to some firm or company with whom the buyer is having frequent transactions, have it include the terms of delivery and in any event be explicit in giving shipping instructions. The phrase "cheapest way" no longer goes. The cheapest way for the shipper may be the express company whose team will call at his door, while the cheapest way for the consignee may be something different.

CARELESSNESS OF NEW YORK SHIPPERS.

I have said so much privately and in public about the negligence of shippers to follow shipping instructions that I expect any reference to this frequently debated subject will occasion an expression of pain on more than one face. The New York shippers and those doing business in adjacent territory are the worst offenders. New Yorkers, while extensive travellers abroad, seem to be ill-informed relative to transportation facilities in their own country. They may be familiar with London, Paris and Berlin, but Chicago is only a dot on the map. If a New York man was asked what railroad reached Chicago, he would probably reply, "The Twentieth Century Limited," and then the chances are favorable that he could not explain how it got there.

Chicago, the terminus of 26 different trunk lines of railway, representing 43 per cent. of the entire railway mileage in the United States, has become so large a distributing point for freight that several of the more important Eastern trunk lines are now operating daily express freight trains between the seaboard and the Garden City. These trains are made up of cars consigned to Chicago or points further west and make the distance between the two cities on a schedule of 72 hours.

EXPLICIT SHIPPING INSTRUCTIONS.

When explicit shipping instructions are given in an order to have the goods delivered to one of these trains, it would seem to be incumbent upon the shipper to make every possible effort to have them followed, especially when one considers the bearing which that important element, "time of delivery," has upon the economic handling of the merchant's business.

When a request is made to mark the cases for a certain train on a specified road and to deliver them to a certain station of that road where the goods for this particular train are received, it will not suffice to merely mark the goods and deliver them to the nearest station of the road to the shipper's plant.

To illustrate: A New York manufacturer wrote us:

"The shipment about which you write is ready. It is so late in the day, however, that our teamster cannot make the train specified in the shipping instructions. As to-morrow is a holiday, we have concluded to save a day's delay by delivering the goods to the nearest station of the railroad mentioned."

One day's delay was saved in shipping, but the goods were loaded on a mixed freight train, were three weeks in transit instead of 72 hours, and arrived in Chicago at a freight terminal so far distant from our place of business that it required a half day's time for a two-horse dray to bring the shipment in, which consisted of a single case. Pending the arrival of the goods we were put to the expense of buying locally at jobbing prices for the purpose of filling orders which could not be held a number of the items contained in the shipment.

ADVISE SHIPPERS OF ERRORS IMMEDIATELY.

Shippers should be promptly advised when goods check short or over.

Make no alterations or changes in the shipper's invoice:

If the goods are shipped short, O. K. the invoice and bill back the shortage.

If the goods check over, O. K. the invoice and request shipper to render additional invoice for the goods received over and above the order, provided it is the desire of the consignee to retain them.

If invoices contain errors in prices or extensions, which will decrease the total, O. K. the invoice and charge back the difference.

If these changes increase the total, either request shipper to render corrected invoice or a bill for the difference.

If any deductions for freight, drayage or other expense have to be made, make them in the form of a charge against the shipper's account, and mail him an invoice.

Alterations in invoices cause confusion in the accounting departments at both ends of the line, and should be avoided.

HOE LIBRARY SALE MAY BREAK RECORDS.

THE sale of the Robert Hoe library by the Anderson Auction Company, it is now definitely announced, will begin on April 24. From that date until May 4, inclusive, two sessions will be held daily, excepting Saturdays and Sundays, and on May 5 there will be one session. All will be devoted to the dispersal of the 3538 lots, comprising the first part of this famous collection of books and manuscripts. It will constitute about one-fourth of the entire library, which includes 16,000 items.

It is expected that the sale will bring the highest aggregate totals of any collection ever sold at auction, not only in America, but in the world, and that at least one of its literary treasures will bring a higher price than has ever before been realized for a single work in the public market. There are said to be no less than ten books and manuscripts in the library that will fetch more than $10,000 each. Chief among them is the copy on vellum of the Gutenberg, or "42-line" Latin Bible, printed by John Gutenberg and John Fust at Mainz, 1450-55. It is bound in two folio volumes, in contemporary oak boards, covered with pigskin. Two leaves, which are in facsimile, constitute, it is said, the only defects. It is the same copy which brought $17,000 at the Perkins sale in 1873 and $20,000 at the Ashburnham sale in 1897. It will be auctioned off the first day of the sale.

Among the other incunabula, or books produced in the infancy of the art, are the "Opera" of Lactantius, printed in 1465 by Conrad Sweynheym and Arnold Pannartz at Subiaco, the first book printed in Italy with a date, and the second book for which Greek type was cast; St. Augustine's "De Civitate Dei," printed in 1470 by the brothers, John and Wendelin of Speier, on vellum, the fourth book printed at Venice, only eight copies known in this state; Sir Thomas Malory's "Le Morte D'Arthur," printed by William Caxton at Westminster in 1485, the finest copy known, and the identical one which brought $9750 at the Earl of Jersey sale, and Bartholomew Glanvile's "De Proprietatibus Rerum," printed about 1495 in London by Wynkyn de Worde, Caxton's successor.

Included in the manuscripts are the "Horae (Hours) of the Virgin Mary," a beautiful illuminated manuscript, known as "The Pembroke Hours," and made for Sir William Herbert, Earl of Pembroke, one of Richard III.'s partisans in the Wars of the Roses, who was captured and executed in 1469; the Roman Missal, a magnificent manuscript on vellum, presented by Charles VI. of France to Henry V. of England on the occasion of the latter's marriage to Catherine of Valois, daughter of Charles VI.; the "Hours" of Anne de Beaujeu, the daughter of Louis XI. of France; a late fifteenth century manuscript of the French poetical version of Ovid's "Epistolae Herodum," presumably executed for Louis XII. and Anne of Brittany, and a thirteenth century illuminated manuscript of Josephus Flavius.

Mr. Hoe was particularly interested in the art of book binding, and his library contains a great number of the works of the masters in this line. Among them are the following: Jean Grolier's "Heliodoms," Basel, 1552; Francesco Guicciardini's "History of Italy," 1561, in mosaic binding by Nicolas Eve for Henry III. of France; a Bible, Edinburgh, 1715, bound by Roger Payne, and "Les Illustrations de Gaube," by Jean le Maire de Belges, bound for Henry II. of France and Diane de Poitiers.

The four Shakespeare folios figure prominently in the English literature array, the first folio, London, 1623, being, so far as known, the second largest copy extant. Other especially notable items are the quarto Hamlet of 1611; Sir William Alexander's "Recreations with the Muses," first edition, London, 1637; "Helyas, Knight of the Swanne," printed in London in 1512 by Wynkyn de Worde, the only known copy, and said to be the only book printed by him on vellum; John Milton's "Paradise Lost," with the second title-page, London, 1667; William Blake's "Milton: a Poem in Twelve Books," the original edition, 1804, of the rarest of all Blake's productions, and a first edition of Robert Burns's "Poems," Kilmarnock, 1786.

Among the more valuable of the Americana are: "A Declaration of Former Passages and Proceedings Betwixt the English and the Narrowgansets, with Their Confederates," by John Winthrop, Cambridge, 1645, the first book on a historical subject printed in English America, and the third surviving example of the issues of Stephen Daye's Press at Cambridge; Daniel Denton's "Brief Description of New York: Formerly Called New Netherlands," a small quarto, printed in London in 1670, and the first work in English, relating exclusively to New York; "Des Sauvages," Paris, 1603, the rare first issue of the narrative of Samuel Champlain's first expedition to Canada, a smaller copy of which was sold at auction in New York City in 1907 for $2900; the rare first edition of the first New York Directory, "Printed by Shepard Kollock, corner of Wall and Water Streets, 1786;" the rare original edition of Ceduslader Colden's "History of the Five Indian Nations," New York, 1727; Richard Hakluyt's "Principal Navigations," London, 1599-1600, and his "Virginia Richly Valued," 1609, and the "Amerigo Vespucci Narratives," Paris, 1503.

Of noteworthy autographs there are among others poems of Robert Burns and letters from him to Captain Hamilton, Mrs. Riddell and Agnes M. C. Lehose, (his "Clarinda;") two long and interesting letters of Edgar Allan Poe, dated 1842 and 1848; manuscripts of Washington Irving; a letter of Cardinal Richelieu to the Canons of the Chapter of the Church of Paris; an Oliver Cromwell document, dated 1652; a letter of Sir Walter Scott to Robert Southey; a letter from Laurence Sterne to a friend, 1763, mentioning "Tristram Shandy;" a letter of Thomas Carlyle, 1865, about the American Civil War; William Wycherly's "Miscellany Poems," 1704, autograph presentation copy from the author, and a letter of Horace Walpole, 1789.

There are also first and early editions of the French classical authors, eighteenth century illustrated books, and limited issues, illustrated with original drawings. The dates of the sale of the three other parts of the library will be announced later.

BRITISH EXPERT THINKS OUR POSTAL SERVICE EXCELLENT.

In contradistinction to the various critics of our Post Office Department, who have of late called its machinery antiquated, its methods obsolete and its organization overburdened with red tape, a well-known foreign expert, Major W. A. J. O'Meara—a high official in the British Post Office and a trained postal expert of long experience—calls it in practical efficiency for mail distribution the very best in the world. Although the postal problem in the United States is far more complex than it is in any country of Europe, Major O'Meara believes that the task of distributing our mail is done wonderfully well.

In a descriptive article and report on our mechanical devices in The Post Office Electrical Engineers' Journal (a London publication) he even adds that the other postal departments of the world are indebted to the United States Post Office for devices of a mechanical kind which have been imitated successfully elsewhere. Certain of our larger post offices—New York, Philadelphia and Chicago—which he visited rouse his special enthusiasm.

He has made numerous recommendations for the adoption of American postal methods and machinery in England, swifter in operation and more ingenious in design than anything they have at present. In spite of our high rates we are a mail using people as no other nation on earth—and a critical one too, Major O'Meara imagines. Speed is a hobby with us; and our post office has met the demand as no other post office has.

THE STORY OF MODERN BOOK ADVERTISING—PART I.

There was no need to advertise the first recorded books, says Algernon Tassin, in the first of a series of articles, in a recent Bookman. The entire edition, strictly an edition de luxe, was invariably sold out before publication. They were the baked-clay tablets struck off for the Chaldean royal residences, and there were probably never more than three copies made of any one book. The publisher, too, was the property of the purchaser, and he was paid for publication in a manner that precluded any risk whatever on his part. The first bookmen who were not thus totally independent of trade fluctuations were Egyptians who made their living, in what a humorist might insinuate is not even to-day an unallied industry, as superintendents of the dead. As in Chaldea, publishing was still a side line; it was only a subordinate activity of funeral directors to dispose of copies of the "Book of the Dead" among the friends of the deceased as a memorial. But they are, as far as is known, the first to undertake the disposal of books under any ordinary trade conditions. Between them and the next recorded bookmen there is a great gap, for, although the Preacher declares with some weariness that of the making of books there was no end, nothing is written of the circumstances of their publication and distribution. In Greece, as far as is ascertained, only a very small class of men owned books, and there was probably no publishing machinery. All references lead one to infer that the price of books was so high as to keep them the rarest of luxuries for the very rich alone. The Roman occupation about 150 B.C. began to change this, for the Roman genius for management seems to have extended into every social activity.

ROMAN PUBLISHING HOUSES.

There were in Augustan Rome established publishing houses which not only turned out large numbers of books, but many editions of them, and at an incredibly small price. That their arrangements were business-like may be inferred from the testimony of Horace. He relates that when an author failed to please the metropolis the publishers shipped the entire edition of his works to the provinces, and if he still failed to go off as writer they made arrangements to bring him back again and sell him as paper to the pastry and spice shops. One great firm in Rome had over two thousand trained slave copyists; and their work was swift and cheap, for Martial writes that they had ready an edition of a thousand copies of his "Epigrams" in just one hour to be sold at ten cents a copy. The exceedingly large reading public which all this indicates must have been many years in growing, and one may assume that Rome had long been a city of readers. Atticus, the publisher of Cicero, had a great many modern methods in the conduct of his business, and the fact that Cæsar's "Commentaries" were very quickly dispatched to the outposts of civilization shows that the machinery of distribution was also well organized. Thus we may conclude that the advertising and publicity department was in good shape.

From the earliest times in both Greece and Rome placards announcing the gladiatorial exhibitions were posted on walls; and as there is mention of the fact that Roman booksellers placarded the outer walls of their shops with the titles of new books, one may guess that so wide-awake a firm as the brothers Sosii knew how to bill the town also. This is the more likely, as Martial tells us that when he wrote advertisements for the booksellers in the shape of epigrams he specified, along with the form and the price of the book, the place where it was offered for sale. Martial had all the advertising dodges of the day at his finger tips, and probably introduced a few new ones. An author so keenly alive to the commercial aspects of his profession would hardly have advertised the baths of Etruscus for nothing. . . . For authors in Rome had long been engaged in widening the demand for their works. Poets, according to Pliny, used to distribute their prospectuses. But the instant popularity of a new scheme for advertising showed that "it filled a long-felt want" in bringing the author into closer contact with the public. This was the practice of giving free public readings, introduced by Asinius Pollio. In spite of his importance in the political world, he had had poor success with his writings until he hit upon the idea of building a private theatre in which to read them. As he was too important a man to neglect openly, people who had not cared to buy his books found it politic to be numbered among those present. Other hungry authors saw the value of the scheme, and as Rome seems always to have buzzed with promoters looking around for something to promote the town soon became studded with halls built to be hired out to authors. With this small expense they could see if they were likely to get back the money invested in publication. So general did the practice become that Pliny notes that through April hardly a day passed without some one giving a recitation. Writers who had not the price of a hall recited on the streets and in the public porticos. . . .

GERMAN BOOK DISTRIBUTION.

Though after the break-up of the Roman Empire the booktrade which it had introduced into Gaul still continued, it became and remained until the close of the fourteenth century almost entirely the making of transcripts for individual buyers under special orders. Both the transcription and the disposal of books were confined to the cloister, and though in several monasteries the matter was put upon a strictly commercial basis it could not be called distinctly a trade, since books were not prepared for general use. Well-defined bookselling machinery existed in Paris and Florence and Venice, but there was no advertising done beyond the issuing of written handbills. This latter was mainly confined to the few secular scribes, who only toward the last years of manuscript writing began to assume the proportions of an organized trade. On the first sheet of a very late manuscript is the following general advertisement: "Any books that are desired, whether great or small, religious or profane, beautifully painted, all of these will be found by Diepold Lauber, scribe in the town of Hagenau." In Germany, unlike the other countries, the only means of distribution of books seems to have been the fairs and the annual markets; and when later the printing press was discovered, this practice facilitated the rapid diffusion of printed matter to an extent almost incredible in days when there were no newspapers. . . .

THE COMING OF PRINT.

As long as books took only the form of expensive manuscript there could, of course, be no popular distribution, especially since only the wealthy, and but few of them, knew how to read. . . . But when the business of bookmaking and distribution left the cloister of monastery and university it speedily came into relations with the people themselves. Especially in the low countries and in Germany the circulation of books among commoners began, and so notably increased that in a short time the selling price went steadily down as the market widened. Thus the need for advertising made itself known once more. As early as 1470 one printer issued a descriptive catalogue of his books after quite a modern fashion. . . .

THE FIRST EUROPEAN FIRMS.

In Italy and France the taste for reading did not spread so quickly as in the North, and until it did so there was little need for advertising. In 1500 Aldus was still depending for the sale of his publications on direct correspondence with his scholars. But in the end, finding personal inquiries too numerous, he printed the first descriptive catalogue with prices ever issued. The great house of Estiennes in Paris and several other large publishing firms grew as rapidly and built up such a remunerative demand for their books—in a day when means of communication and even travel itself were irregular and difficult—that, like Aldus, they were soon forced to give up personal correspondence. Henry Estiennes thus begins his catalogue in verse:

With letters ceaseless I'm annoyed.
Italian, German, English, French,
All on my studious hours intrench.
"What last has been achieved and ended?
What are the impressions next intended?"
These pages few as best may suit you
In form of catalogue salute you.

. . . It remained to the printers of Paris to be the first to advertise formally the wonderful cheapness of their wares. As early as 1500 this sign appeared in a printer's window: "Don't run away on account of the price. Come, rich and poor: this excellent work is sold for a very small sum." . . . The genius of the craft, however, struck the top-notch of contemporary advertising when he persuaded a dignified professor of the University of Paris to inform the public that they must be grateful to him for "this beautiful and cheap book:" and thus the puff direct began again its useful journey, intermitted since the days of Rome. . . . The stall business of displaying in the open air on planks set up on trestles began about this time, and the stall-keepers had a special cry proclaiming the marvellous cheapness of their wares to arrest the passerby. But if the enterprising printers of Paris first exploited by sign and puff and cry the inexpensiveness of their publications, it was a German who in 1591 printed the first approach to a newspaper advertisement. A newsletter extolled a book describing a magic plant supposed to give warning of disaster, and both newsletter and book were undoubtedly the output of the same shop.

CAXTON AND THE FIRST POSTER.

In England, however, more than one hundred years before this, Caxton had printed the first poster. It announced the sale of a collection of rules of the diocese of Salisbury, "Pyes of Salisbury use," and gave his name and sign. This was at the Red Pole in the Almonry at Westminster, whither—according to his business announcement in 1480—"if it please any man spirituel or temporel to bye . . . lat him come and he shall have them good chepe." But Caxton by no means catered to men alone; on his list were many poems and romances and treatises of love of a decidedly temporal nature, and he was apparently the first publisher to reach out to capture the larger public of women so emphatically sought for these days. He knew the circle of scholars and theologians was small, and he wisely quadrupled the demand by his adventurous policy. Nevertheless, in spite of his business instinct, he had strict notions as to the dignity of the trade, and the immediate business of bookselling was entirely a subordinate affair with him and the first English printers. They were desirous of selling their books, it is true, but they never dreamed of giving their chief attention to doing so. The bookseller as a prime branch of the business came in during Elizabeth's reign. Unlike the earlier ones, these booksellers were neither educated nor concerned with scholarly affairs, and they were also accustomed by nature and training to all the dodges of a precarious living. Having little else on their minds, they had leisure to devise all sorts of advertising schemes to dispose of their goods, which were more often than not stolen or forced from starving authors. Their bills were stuck all over town. . . Most of the ordinary booksellers' dodges of the time are probably mentioned by Heath in his "Epigrams," published in 1650.

TO MY BOOKSELLER.

I have common made my book; 'tis very true,
But I'd not have thee prostitute it too;
Nor show it barefaced on the open stall
To tempt the buyer; nor poast it on each wall
And corner poast, close underneath the play
That must be acted at Black Friers to-day;
Nor see some Herring-cryer for a groat
To voice it up and down with tearing throat;
Nor bid thy prentice read it and admire
That all the shop may what he reads inquire;
No: proffer'd wares do smell; I'd have thee knew
Pride scorns to beg: modestie fears to wooe.

LITERATURE AND QUACKERY.

It was during the Elizabethan age that books began to be associated with quack medicines and pills and nostrums. Just as the earliest bookseller on record was an undertaker also, many of the Elizabethan booksellers sold drugs of all descriptions. These made both ends meet by dealing in the remedies their medical works mentioned. Bookshops, too, were often depositories for clandestine and questionable correspondence. This increased the evil reputation the trade had got when it fell into the hands of printers who made a vocation of stolen goods and their business the last stopping house this side of open knavery and vagabondage.

It was May 23, 1622, that the first periodical newspaper came out in England, and in it appeared some publishers' announcements. They were not, however, strictly advertisements in the usual sense of the word. The earliest real advertisement came out in April, 1647, and ran as follows: "A Book applauded by the Clergy of ENGLAND called THE DIVINE RIGHT OF CHURCH GOVERNMENT, Collected by sundry eminent MINISTERS in the Citie of LONDON; Corrected and augmented in many places, with a briefe Reply to certain Queries against the ministry of ENGLAND; Is printed and publish'd for JOSEPH HUNSCOT and GEORGE CALVERT, and are to be sold at the Stationers Hall and at the Golden Fleece in the Old Change." Publishers' advertisements were the first species to develop in the newspapers, and those of quack remedies were a close second. . . .

THE INIQUITIES OF ADDISON.

It is interesting to note that it was the Spectator which first started the habit of advertisements for other commodities than books or quack medicines; and, sad to say, the fashion seems to have been introduced by its policy of puffing liberally anybody who paid for space—a policy which one would scarcely think of the great Mr. Addison not only following, but originating. There are, as Lawrence Lewis points out, several striking instances of the Spectator's business office dictating editorial "speculations." The nearest he came to it in book matters was when he wrote a series of papers on "Paradise Lost" to help out the sale of Tonson's edition, which was remaining on the shelves, and when he devoted a paper to praising the "Cartoons of Raphael," engravings of which were advertised in the same number. . . . But none of the puffery appeared in the advertisements themselves, and they were for the most part merely substantial or detailed announcements of the form and content of the books. Those coming nearest to any bid for attractiveness are the following: "A Treatise of the Hypochondriac and Hysterick Passions, vulgarly called the HYPO in men and VAPOURS in women; in which the symptoms, causes and cure of those Diseases are set forth after a Method entirely new. The whole interspersed with instructive Remarks on the Modern Practice of PHYSICIANS and APOTHECARIES: Very useful to all that have the Misfortune to stand in need of either."

FIELDING AND DEFOE.

All this time, of course, had been developing and increasing other forms of advertising, indirect, but even more effective. Advertisement by dedication was not at all to be despised as an excellent method of attracting the attention of the public at large. The patron's assistance was by no means over with publication; people were interested in books for which great names graciously stood sponsor. Dryden's publisher thought the dedication of his "Virgil" to King William such a good stroke of business that he made the matter doubly conspicuous by having Eneas drawn with a hooked nose like the king. The practice, too, of issuing proposals for bringing out books by subscription worked also as an advertisement.

Doubtless as much publicity as possible was obtained by this, though there is no record that the proposals were advertised in the picturesque way of a generation or two before, when the practice of selling books by lottery was in vogue, and at least one publisher-author had his book lottery announced in the theatre. Authors also had grown alert to the wisdom of allowing their coming events to cast a shadow before. At the end of the second volume of "Amelia," Fielding inserted an advertisement of his projected newspaper, The Covent Garden Journal.

The practical Defoe preferred to look backward rather than to gamble in futures. In each pamphlet he systematically referred to a previous one, and if any had the misfortune of failing to sell he would write another pamphlet just for the purpose of calling attention to it. So well known was he as an adroit and robust advertiser that when, in 1705, a bookseller could not get rid of a large edition of a heavy book called "The Christian's Defence Against the Fear of Death" he applied to Defoe to help him out. Thereupon the agile author wrote the account of Mrs. Veale, and in the recital of the circumstantial details of which he was past master, he put a recommendation of this book as "the best on that subject ever written." At once the edition was completely sold out. Perhaps Defoe's most spectacular exploit in the advertising field was when he brought out the "Life of Jack Shepard" during the trial of that worthy, and, to cap the climax, managed to get an allusion made to it from the very scaffold itself.

BYRON AND BULWER.

The Morning Chronicle in 1802 made a specialty of book advertisements and exhibited, for the time, much ingenuity in the matter of display. Publishers had the fashion then of keeping back their announcements until they had enough to bunch them together in what was called a "cloud" or "swarm," in order to impress the public with the extent of their business. "Each bookseller," wrote the proprietor of this journal, "is desirous of having his cloud of advertisements inserted in the front page. The new advertisements, one at a time, would not do; they would have the cloud. Then, said I, there is no place for the cloud but the last page. The booksellers were affronted, indignant. The last page! To obtain the accommodation they set up a morning paper, the British Press, and to oppose the Courier, an evening one, the Globe. Possessed of general influence among literary men, could there be a doubt of success?"

And thus began a period when the booksellers practically had it all their own way and controlled most of the organs of literary opinion; and the era of brazen puffery came about.

Byron, in the meantime, had introduced a new note into book advertising, that of the carefully nurtured personality; and the idea he had furnished to his publisher on his return from the grand tour proving effective enough to sell out the edition of "Childe Harold" in three days, the trade seized upon it with avidity. Byron, by his paleness, his calculated abstinence from food in public, and his interesting air of abysmal wickedness, showed the publishers the commercial value of an intangibility. It was a foregone conclusion that Bulwer-Lytton—the Barnum of his day, as he has been called—would not lag far behind in exploiting his showy personality. And Bulwer, like Byron, did not the less appreciate advertisement for his contact with the stage—indeed both of them proved quite able to teach the theatres a thing or two. Then came Disraeli, equally interesting as a social figure and through necessity even more anxious for personal notoriety.

DISRAELI AND SCOTT.

If Dizzy had not been a self-advertiser there would probably have been no Dizzy, and he made his novels as he made everything else serve him in that respect. Christopher North in Blackwood denounced "the shameful and shameless puffery" by which the sale of "Vivian Grey" had been secured. But the publisher, having almost complete command of the literary press, was able to keep up as long as it was profitable the discussion of the identity of the author. Scott, with Waverley, had taught the trade the commercial value of mystery. "No artifice by which notoriety can be obtained is now thought too abject for a man of letters," wrote Macaulay in his wrath, turning the full vial of it on the scapegoat Robert Montgomery. But only Montgomery suffered the blight of his majestic censure, and puffery, secure in controlling most of the channels of publicity, went on undisturbed. Besides the market price of personality and of mystery, the trade had by this time well learned the value of the hoax, and the lately discovered manuscript, and the long list of temporarily successful impostures had begun.

THACKERAY.

While there seem to have been no definite schemes launched for the exploitation of the books of the Wizard of the North, Scott's whole life was one which served indirectly to advertise his novels. His palace at Abbotsford, his friendship for the Prince Regent, his truckling to national prejudice in his absurd "Life of Napoleon," all helped him to sell. Indeed a little pamphlet might be written on High Life and the Book Trade. It is well known how the marriage of the Marquis of Lorne put the breath of life into that still-born infant, "Lorna Doone;" and how it was not passed over by her publishers that the late queen's favorite novelist was Marie Corelli. But Thackeray did more than cater to the English love of a lord or introduce ill-disguised portraits of celebrated personages in his novels; he was accused of aiming at the patronage of the British nobility in his "English Humourists" and of bidding for the American market in his lectures on the "Four Georges." . . .

DICKENS AND READE.

Dickens knew the value of advertising and did not hesitate to make use of it. His lecture tours served the two-fold purpose of putting money directly into his pocket and spreading the fame of his books. Charles Reade wrote anonymously a long article on himself for Once a Week, in which he said: "It is impossible to speak too highly of 'The Cloister and the Hearth;' it is one of the most scholar-like and learned as well as one of the most artistic and beautiful works of fiction in any language. Read him: resign yourself to the magic spell of his genius. The effect of 'Foul Play' is perfectly marvellous. It leaves the stories of every other sensational novel writer far behind."

M. DE BALZAC ON BALZAC.

Nor was Balzac in France disdaining to puff his own works. "If you have not been born a story-teller," he wrote in a review, "you will never obtain the popularity of Monsieur de Balzac. And what a story-teller! What verve and wit! How the world is dissected by this man! What passion and coolness!" The exclamation marks are characteristic, for the French school of the first half of the century was far more open than the English in exploiting itself. It is true that Richard Savage's publisher advertised his author's having killed a man, but Balzac seems almost to have provoked duels with his publishers for the sake of advertisement. All his life his head was seething with schemes to attract attention to his books. "My friend," said he, "I have the brilliant idea to open a grocery store with Honoré de Balzac printed over the door in gilt letters and me in a blouse behind the counter: this will create such a scandal that every one will buy my books."

DUMAS AND HUGO.

The elder Dumas used his astonishing personality, his political ambitions, and the extravagance of his château of Monte Cristo to attract attention to his romances. In later life he descended to fiddling in a restaurant as a means of self-advertising. Théophile Gautier strutted about Paris in an extraordinary red waistcoast in order to attract attention to himself and to his work. Victor Hugo was the very personification of self-exploitation. Beneath that colossal egotism, which on one occasion led him to suggest gravely that the issue of the Franco-Prussian War be decided by personal combat between himself and the King of Prussia, there was a strong vein of shrewdness. No publisher who ever had dealings with him was able to forget that he was an excellent business man, and he must have understood that these manifestations of his vanity would result in increased sales. He left nothing to chance, however, for he took pains to write his advertisements himself.

THE EXPLOITATION OF SUE.

But the height of literary advertising of the first half of the last century was reached in the case of Eugene Sue's famous novel, "The Wandering Jew." A French newspaper publisher contracted for the serial rights of the latter and then proceeded to make the most of his bargain by methods which, as some one has expressed it, would have made a modern American stare. Every little while the daily instalment would fail to appear, and in its place would be a notice that M. Sue was suffering from a slight indisposition and the readers would be obliged to wait forty-eight hours for new developments of the narrative. So well did these methods succeed that it was impossible to buy outright a copy of the journal, and instead copies were rented out at ten sous for half an hour, the time thought necessary to read the instalment. And all the while Sue himself was industriously abetting the publishers by posing overdressed and with spurs to his boots at the Café de Paris in an attitude of deepest abstraction, as if wondering what the next instalment would be about. The brothers Sosii and Martial must have been much chagrined when the report reached them in the Elysian Fields.

THE BIBLE TERCENTENARY.

Some Precursors of the King James Revised Version.

Three centuries ago the translation of the Bible known to us all as the "Authorized Version" was given to the English people. The year of its appearance (1611) is beyond dispute, but the exact date is unknown; that is why this commemoration is being observed in different countries in different months: in Canada in February, in Great Britain on April 26, in the United States in April.

But whenever it appeared, it came as the fruit of centuries of desire, expectation and preparation. Notwithstanding the disfavor with which the unreformed Church has ever regarded the indiscriminate circulation of the Scriptures—the Council of Toulouse forbade it in 1229, and Pius IV. proclaimed that it does more harm than good—she had no aversion from translations as such; how could she when her own cherished and authoritative Vulgate is one? So English ecclesiasts at an early date essayed to give their countrymen a Bible which they could understand, Aldhelm, for example, translated the Psalter in the seventh century, and Bede is said to have spent the last moments of his life in completing the Anglo-Saxon version of St. John's Gospel. And not only ecclesiastics. King Alfred was a translator in his day, and he expressed the wish that "all the freeborn youth of his kingdom should be able to read the English Scriptures," and the manuscripts in the British Museum (the Durham Book, e.g.), the Bodleian, etc., reveal to us that frequent efforts were made in this direction; all these versions of course were made from the Vulgate. So too was Wycliffe's (the rendering of the Old Testament, so far as it goes, was the work of Nicholas of Hereford), toward the close of the fourteenth century, undertaken that "pore Christen men may some deal know the text of the Gospel"—and for their edification it was furnished with a commentary.

Wycliffe was not unaware of its imperfections; he tells us, speaking of the Psalter, that "the texte of our bokis discordeth much from the Ebreu;" he also complained of the corrupt text of the "comune Latyne Bibles." But what was he to do? The scholarship of that age allowed nothing better; moreover, the friars, who dominated Oxford, protested that the study of Hebrew would make men Jews, as that of Greek would leave them Pagans. It shows the wide circulation which this version attained, that, in spite of Archbishop Arundel's efforts for its destruction, 150 manuscripts thereof are still in existence. By the time of Henry VIII., however, its language was already becoming obselete, while the yearning for an English Bible was every year growing stronger. It was then that Tyndale (who has been called "the true hero of the English Reformation") appeared on the scene, fired with the idea of making "a boy that driveth the plough" to know more of Scripture than the priests did; he devoted his life to the work, and it cost him his life; betrayed by a false friend, he was beheaded at Vilvoorde, in Belgium, and his body was burned; this was for the crime of having given the English the Word of God in their mother tongue.

His version, printed first at Cologne, and subsequently at Worms, encountered much opposition both from king and prelates. His dying prayer, before the stroke fell, was, "Lord, open the King of England's eyes." His English text was unfortunately supplemented by notes, often of a polemical character, and this no doubt helped to prejudice the authorities, both in Church and State, against it. He had hoped at first to gain the favor of Tunstal, Bishop of London, for the work, but he was not long in discovering "not only that there was no room in my Lord of London's palace for translating the New Testament, but also that there was no place to do it in all England." It is but an instalment—only a few books of the Old Testament were done into English, but it was extremely well done, and it is the true parent of the Authorized Version. It was accused at the time of "corrupting the text after Luther's counsel," but never was a translation made with more transparent honesty; he could call God to witness that "I never altered one syllable of God's Word against my conscience, nor would this day if all that is in the world might be given me." Nor is that its only merit—"the exquisite grace and simplicity which have endeared the Authorized Version to men of the most opposite tempers and contrasted opinions—to J. H. Newman and J. A. Froude—is due mainly to his clearsighted truthfulness;" it is owing to him, too, that our later versions have been popular and not scholastic. It remained, however, for Coverdale to give us our first complete Bible in the vernacular.

Rogers, who carried on Tyndale's work, only got as far as Isaiah. Coverdale was no great scholar; he confesses that his rendering is based on "the Douche (German) and the Latyn," but he has one great merit; he was a master of English prose and of rhythmical and sonorous expression, as may indeed be gathered from the Prayer Book version of the Psalter which follows his translation. But his work could not be accepted for long; it was too inaccurate (he himself indicated by a pointer "the darck places of ye texte"), and it only held the field till 1568, though it was "authorized to be read and frequented in every church in the kingdom;" it was practically superseded in 1560 by the Genevan translation, the work of English refugees at that place. This was finally printed in England and in Roman type (all the rest had been in black letter), and for some sixty years was very popular, especially with the Puritans; nor did the "Bishop's Bible," which appeared in 1572, a careful and scholarly production, avail to dislodge it; for one thing, it was too large and expensive. And the very existence of competing versions side by side, or one in the church and another in the home, confirmed the desire for a new translation and one that should have some finality about it.

Accordingly at the Hampton Court Conference (1604) the Puritan Reynolds raised the question. The bishops, who had their own version, regarded the idea of another revision with some disfavor, but it caught the fancy of the king; that latter day Solomon may have foreseen that it would be the great distinction of his reign. So he very promptly appointed himself director of the undertaking and issued his instructions to the three companies—fifty-four scholars all told, one at Oxford, another at Cambridge, the third at Westminster—who for the next three years toiled at this sacred task, of which the version we are now commemorating was the fruit.—From the Saturday Review.

Oxford University Press Tercentenary Bibles.

The Oxford University Press, as well as Cambridge, are publishing new editions of the Authorized Version especially for the Tercentenary.

The first of these is a photographic facsimile in a slightly reduced size (11¾ x 8¼ inches), but containing all the characteristics of the original of the 1611 Bible in black letter, printed on rag-made paper, and edited, with a bibliographical introduction, by Alfred W. Pollard, M.A., assistant keeper of printed books in the British Museum. The volume consists of 1550 pages and contains the translators' preface to the Reader, the Calendar, and all the material contained in original copies of the King James Bible. This commemorative volume has been specially prepared for libraries and for those who wish to possess the King James Bible in its original form, and sells for $15.

They also have an exact reprint in roman type of the Authorized Version of 1611, edited, with a bibliographical introduction, by Alfred W. Pollard. Size 8 x 5¼ inches. Mr. Pollard's bibliographical introduction is the same as in the larger volume, but the smaller edition lacks the illustrative documents. This edition is printed on Oxford India paper, bound in cloth, and sells for $4.50.

The Oxford University Press also announce "Records of the English Bible: being the documents [sixty-three in number] relating to the translation and publication of the Bible in English, 1523-1611." This volume is also edited, with the introduction already described, by Alfred W. Pollard, and will be found a valuable work for students of the Bible.

CRAIGE LIPPINCOTT DEAD.

As The Publishers' Weekly goes to press comes the news of the death of Craige Lippincott, head of the publishing house of J. B. Lippincott Company. Mr. Lippincott was found Thursday morning with a bullet wound in his forehead. Whether, however, his death was accidental, or whether he committed suicide during a period of temporary aberration, is not yet clear.

In any case his death is one that imposes a serious loss upon the American publishing profession, concerning his work, for which it will be possible for us to speak next week in more detail.

COMMUNICATIONS.

MARCH 21, 1911.

"BOOK AUCTION RECORDS."

To the Editor of The Publishers' Weekly.

DEAR SIR: Seeing a notice of "Book-Auction Records" in your issue of March 11, we should like to add that all the important Scotch and Irish book sales are now recorded in "Book-Auction Records" in addition to the London sales, and that it is the only publication in which these records are obtainable. The reason for including these is that we found that many old Scotch and Irish works occur at the sales in Dublin, Edinburgh and Glasgow which are seldom or never in the London sales.

Yours faithfully,
KARSLAKE & Co.

CANADA'S PROPOSED LEGISLATION ON COPYRIGHT.

Special Correspondence to The Publishers' Weekly.

TORONTO, ONT., March 29, 1911.

A MEMORANDUM, giving the heads of the new copyright act, which will be submitted to the Dominion Parliament at its present session, has just been issued by the Canadian Government. It is a drastic measure in some respects and one that will not be regarded with much favor by United States publishers.

In brief, Canada now takes the administration of copyright into its own hands. Hitherto, while there was a so-called Canadian Copyright Act, it was to a large extent a dead letter. To all practical intents and purposes British copyright covered Canada and the Canadian measure was a superfluity. Now, Canada becomes virtually an independent nation so far as copyright is concerned.

The new act is the outcome of the Imperial Conference on Copyright held in London last June, when representatives of all the self-governing portions of the British Empire were present to discuss and arrive at a decision regarding mutual action on imperial copyright. Canada was represented at the Conference by the Hon. Sydney Fisher, Minister of Agriculture, in whose department copyright matters are handled. After it was over there were rumors that Canada was going to attempt to pass somewhat advanced legislation on the subject and that the United States publishers were to be discriminated against.

While it is impossible to judge from the material at hand to what extent this is true, there can be no doubt that the new measure will affect the relations at present existing between American publishers and Canadian publishers and booksellers. A special preference is given to the British publisher, which, if it is pushed to the extreme, will have a serious result in reducing the number of American books sold in Canada.

The heads of the new act as set forth in the memorandum are eleven in number and read as follows:

1. Subject to the provisions of the Act copyright shall subsist in every original, literary, dramatic, musical, and artistic work the author of which was at the date of making the work a bona fide resident in Canada.

2. The work shall before publication be registered in the register established for registration of copyrights and assignments and every copy of the work published shall be made in Canada; in the case of a book, "making" includes printing.

3. One registration of a newspaper or other periodical publication shall suffice to protect all future issues.

4. Copyright means the sole right to produce or reproduce the work or any substantial part thereof in any material form whatsoever and in any language; to perform, or, in the case of a lecture, address, speech or sermon, to deliver the work or any substantial part thereof in public; if the work is unpublished, to publish the work. Copyright also includes the right to make any record, perforated roll or other contrivance by means of which any work may be mechanically performed.

5. The term of copyright is the life of the author and fifty years after his death.

(a) In the case of a work of joint authorship the term is the life of the author who dies first and fifty years after his death, or during the life of the author who dies last, whichever period is longer.

(b) In the case of a posthumous work the term is fifty years from first publication.

(c) Where the work of an author is first published as a contribution to a collective work, or to a periodical, the author may retain the copyright in the contributed article, and the proprietor of the periodical has the right of reproducing the collective work as a whole and, for fifty years from the date of publication of the collective work, can prevent infringement of the contribution by a third party.

6. Copyright ceases on first publication outside Canada.

(a) Publication means the issue of copies to the public.

(b) Publication of a work in a foreign country simultaneously with first publication in Canada does not invalidate copyright.

(c) Publications are deemed to be simultaneous if the time between them does not exceed fourteen days.

7. Copyright may be assigned, but the assignee must signify the conditions conferring copyright laid down by the Act.

(a) An unregistered assignment is void as against a subsequent registered assignment made for valuable consideration and without actual notice.

8. The importation into Canada of copies made out of His Majesty's Dominions of any work in which copyright subsists, is prohibited.

9. Where any part of His Majesty's Dominions other than Canada has made or undertaken to make provisions for the protection of persons entitled to copyright under the provisions of this Act, copyright obtained under the law of such part of His Majesty's Dominion by authors who are bona fide residents therein or who are British subjects resident elsewhere than Canada, may be given protection in Canada, by Order in Council.

10. Where the owner of the copyright in a book first published in any part of His Majesty's Dominions other than Canada grants to a Canadian publisher a license to reproduce in Canada an edition for circulation in Canada only, the Minister of Agriculture may make an Order prohibiting the importation into Canada, except with the written consent of the licensee, of any copies of such book printed elsewhere.

(a) Two such copies may be specially imported for the use of any public free library or university library.

11. The Governor in Council may make arrangements with foreign countries whereby the subjects or citizens thereof may obtain copyright protection in Canada upon such terms and subject to such conditions as may be specified in the Order.

No comment is necessary on Section 1. Section 2 will require some further explanation before its effect is apparent. If printing includes typesetting as well, as is quite likely to be the subsequent interpretation, then Canadian publishers will in future be unable to secure copyright on books printed from imported American plates. This is a custom which has been practiced in several cases of late years.

Section 5 changes the term of copyright from a period of twenty-eight years from the date of registration to the life of the author and fifty years after his death. This is an important change but it has no special significance from an international standpoint.

Sections 8 and 9 are new and important. They give protection to the works of British authors in Canada. Under them it will be impossible for American editions of British authors to enter the Dominion, provided the British publishers take the necessary steps under the Order in Council, referred to in Section 9, to protect their editions. Hitherto very little attempt has been made to shut out American editions from the Canadian market and it has been no uncommon thing to see both British and American editions of novels on sale in the book stores in Canada. Technically, the American editions may have had no rights, but the Canadian customs authorities took cognizance only of the few books which had Canadian copyright registration. Otherwise the matter seemed to be purely one of arrangement between the British and American publishers as to which should have the Canadian market for their various books. So far as the books of British authors are concerned, it is clear that only the British editions will be entitled to entry. But a somewhat anomalous situation will be created when British editions of the books of American authors, duly copyrighted in Great Britain, will, under Section 9, be refused the protection of Canadian copyright.

Section 11 forms the only bright spot in the bill for the American publisher. Much will depend on the arrangement which will necessarily have to be entered into between the Governments of the two countries. That some such arrangement should be made and brought into force contemporaneously with the enforcement of the Canadian act, is apparent. Otherwise, American books and magazines will be open to the predations of pirates.

At present it is a very simple matter for an American publisher to get copyright for his books or periodicals in the British Empire, including Canada. To entitle him to copyright, all that is necessary to do is to place copies on sale at some point within the Empire and to arrange for registration at Stationers' Hall in London. There is no manufacturing requirement. It has become quite a common custom for American publishers to send a few copies of their books or magazines to agents in Toronto or Montreal, who place them on sale, and at the same time to attend to the formalities in London. By this means British copyright is quickly and easily gained. So far at any rate as Canada is concerned, it will no longer be sufficient to do this, unless the arrangement referred to in Section 11 can be made to cover it.

The bill is not law yet by any means and before it is finally passed, there may be changes made in it. As it stands its aim is obviously to give British publishers a substantial preference in the Canadian book market. (Signed) W. O. C.

OBITUARY NOTES.

Mrs. Ellen H. Richards, sanitary chemist, instructor at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, and wife of Professor Robert H. Richards, of the Department of Mining Engineering of the same, died March 30, after a week's illness. Mrs. Richards had been connected with the institute nearly forty years and was an indefatigable worker. She was born in Dunstable, Mass., in 1842, was graduated from Vassar in 1870, and from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology in 1873. She continued at the institute as a resident graduate, and married Professor Richards in 1875. In 1885 she became instructor in Chemistry and Mineralogy in the Woman's Laboratory of the institute, and later she became Instructor in Sanitary Chemistry. Her influence in developing scientific studies among women was large. As chemist of the Manufacturers Mutual Fire Insurance Co. she had much to do with oils, in reference to safety from spontaneous combustion, explosion, etc., and was also a specialist in water analysis. Early interested in domestic science, she was a founder and long prominent in the Lake Placid Conference in Home Economics, and, since 1909, was president of the American Home Economic Association which succeeded it. Her list of books is a long one, the most important being: "Chemistry of Cooking and Cleaning," 1882; "Home Sanitation," 1887; "The Cost of Living," 1899; "Air, Water and Food," 1900; "First Lessons in Minerals," 1900; "The Cost of Food," 1900; "Cost of Shelter," 1905; "First Lessons in Food and Diet," 1905; "The Art of Right Living," 1905; "Food Materials and Their Adulteration," 1906; "Sanitation in Daily Life," 1907; "The Cost of Cleanness," 1908; "Industrial Water Analysis," 1909; Euthenics, the Science of Controllable Environment," 1910; "Notes on Water Analysis for Engineers," 1910; "Conservation by Sanitation," 1911.

NOTES ON AUTHORS.

THE English poet laureate, Alfred Austin, who will be seventy-six next May, has written his reminiscences, and the work will be published in two volumes by Mamillan during the present season. Mr. Austin practiced as a barrister for a few years, but it is probable that his recollections will be mainly occupied with his career as journalist and man of letters.

ANNE WARWICK, whose novel "Compensation" has been published by John Lane Company, is at present at Nice. She plans to spend the early spring in Italy, and is contemplating a tour by motor. The daughter of a man whose professional eminence has made him a well-known figure in Washington, D. C., and in various other cities of the country, she has preferred to publish her first novel pseudonymously.

SIR ARTHUR QUILLER-COUCH, in the preface to his new anthology, "The Oxford Book of Ballads," offers this allegiance to Rudyard Kipling: "If any poet now alive," he says, "can be called a ballad writer of genius it is the author of 'Danny Deever' and 'East and West.'" And yet it is, upon Kipling's later and now, for some inscrutable reason, comparatively less well known poems, that his more enduring fame as a poet will rest.

VAUGHAN KESTER, whose new novel, "The Prodigal Judge," has just been published by The Bobbs-Merrill Company, began his literary work while the Kesters were living in the Big White House, as it was called, on Riverside Drive in New York. Here he wrote "The Manager of the B. and A.," a railway story which the Harpers published. His next book, "The Fortunes of the Landrays," was written at Woodlawn Mansion, the home which Washington bequeathed to his adopted daughter, Nellie Custis, a part of the Mount Vernon estate. From Woodlawn the Kesters migrated to Angill Castle, Westmoreland, England. Here the novelist found material which he was afterward to use in his story of Jamestown. Returning to America, the Kesters are now settled at Gunston Hall, Virginia, where "The Prodigal Judge" has been written.

LITERARY AND TRADE NOTES.

GRENVILLE BARKER has arranged with Mitchell Kennerley for American publication of all his work, past, present and future. The first volume will be "Three Plays," containing "Waste," "The Marrying of Ann Lute" and "The Voysey Inheritance."

HENRY HOLT & COMPANY have published "The Garland of Childhood," an anthology compiled by Percy Withers, who has gathered together prose and poetry about children from authors as widely separated in time and thought as Dr. Watts and John Galsworthy.

IN his latest play, "The Rats," Gerhardt Hauptmann presents the lowest stratum of Berlin society. The rats are the poor souls, vexed and degenerate, who are constantly gnawing at the traditions upon which society rests. Cheerful.

"EDUCATIONAL PROBLEMS," by Dr. G. Stanley Hall, is announced for publication the end of April by D. Appleton & Company, in two large octavo volumes. This work is said to contain the ripened results of twenty-five years of teaching education as an academic subject.

THE new Aldus edition of Shakespeare, in 40 volumes, is now exclusively controlled by the original publishers, Bigelow, Smith & Company, 11 Cliff Street, New York. Its sale is open to the entire trade without restriction, excepting a guarantee of maintenance of retail prices.

FREDERICK A. STOKES COMPANY announce that Susan Glaspell's new book, "The Visioning," to be ready about April 28, will be $1.35 net, instead of $1.25 net, as at first stated. The increased price has been found necessary on account of the length of the book, which will have 480 pages.

J. B. LIPPINCOTT COMPANY announce that they have arranged to publish at an early date "Phrynette," by Marthe Troly-Curtin, the most talked-about of the new Season's books in London to-day. The story is distinguished by its quaintness and original style, and went into a second edition in London almost immediately after publication.

As an instance of the interest taken in Australia in American-made books, A. C. McClurg & Company have just made shipment to Melbourne of about 3000 volumes. Of course fiction predominates, bnt in this particular shipment were fifty copies of Joseph Mills Hanson's "Frontier Ballads," and other miscellaneous titles.

MARY S. WATTS, whose "Nathan Burke" made such a pronounced hit last year, has just turned over to her publishers the manuscript of a new novel, entitled "The Legacy." The scene of this story is the same as that of "Nathan Burke," but the time is the present and the principal character is a woman.

"MISS MINERVA AND WILLIAM GREEN HILL," Mrs. Frances Calhoun's little book, is just going to press for a twelfth edition of 10,000 copies. Reilly & Britton announce it has appeared twenty-four times in the Bookman's best-sellers, in 1910 and 1911, as well as 1909, the year of its publication—some evidence of its enduring popularity.

THE BOOK COMPOSITION COMPANY, New York, have for sale a new set of plates made from first-class "American" type-founder's 10-point type of Fenimore Cooper's "Leather Stocking Tales," a total of 2392 pages, including 40 plate boxes. These are offered to the highest bidder for cash, and offers are requested. The firm will be glad to send on application their catalogue entitled "Book Composition."

THIS week Doubleday, Page & Company publish three books of widely different character: "Panther's Cub," by Agnes and Egerton Castle, is the story of a much pampered opera singer; "Music of the Wild," by Gene Stratton-Porter, is an elaborate nature volume containing many illustrations; "Household Plumbing and Sanitation," by J. Pickering Putnam, is a standard work upon this important subject, written by an expert in it.

DE WITT & SNELLING, of Oakland, Cal., will publish shortly an item of interest to collectors of Twainiana—a letter written by Mark Twain from Elmira, N. Y., in the latter part of 1869 to the New York Society of California Pioneers, in reply to a letter inviting him to their banquet. It is thoroughly characteristic, describing his early experiences in the mining district of Nevada. The edition is a limited one.

ON April 15 "People of Popham," by Mary C. E. Wemyss, author of "The Professional Aunt," will appear. Both books are published by Houghton Mifflin Company. The earlier work ran through three editions in the first few months after publication, and the publishers feel confident of an even greater success for this new book, which is longer and more ambitious, with the delightful humor displayed in the author's other story quite as much in evidence.

POSTMASTER-GENERAL HITCHCOCK announced Friday of last week that, after several years of negotiations, a parcels-post convention between the United States and Hayti has been concluded. By the ratification of this treaty another country was added to the forty to which parcels up to eleven pounds in weight may be sent by mail from the United States at the rate of 12 cents a pound. Meanwhile we still pay sixteen cents a pound to send a package from New York to Jersey City.

THE OUTING PUBLISHING CO. published on April 6 "The Range Riders," by Charles Alden Seltzer. The publishers note that they "have waited patiently" for a book that would prove a fit introduction for the Outing line in the field of fiction, and they believe that, in "The Range Riders," they have found it. It is the figures of a romantic yesterday that rise before us—these boys of the Bar X and Lazy J, to ride and shoot, to work and gamble, to love and hate—human, virile, and compelling on paper as they were in the flesh.

FROM the Macmillan Company we have received "World Literature and Its Place in General Culture," by Richard G. Moulton, Professor of Literary Theory and Interpretation in the University of Chicago. This book presents a conception of world literature not in the sense of the sum total of particular literatures, but as a unity, the literary field seen in perspective from the point of view of the English-speaking people. Theoretical treatment is throughout supplemented by exposition of masterpieces.

HARPER & BROTHERS announce that they are publishing this week four new books: "Memories and Impressions," by Ford Madox Hueffer; "The King Over the Water," a novel by Justin Huntly McCarthy; "Natural Christianity," by Dean Fremantle of Ripon; "The Birth of Worlds and Systems," by Professor A. W. Bickerton. The same firm is adding this week "The Well Beloved" to the new thin-paper edition of Thomas Hardy's novels.

THE leading articles in the April Bookman are George Middleton's "The Text-book Game and Its Quarry;" George Jean Nathan's sadly amusing write up of the fiction writing correspondence schools, under the heading "Become a Maupassant by Mail!" and "The Trail of the Lower South," in Montrose J. Moses' "The South in Fiction." "The Girl-Alone-in-the-City Novel" figures this month in the series of "Inside Views of Fiction," and there is the usual discriminatingly persuasive "Chronicle and Comment."

GEORGE W. JACOBS & CO. announce that they will have a new book this year in their series of animal biographies by Clarence Hawkes. It is to be entitled "King of the Thundering Herd," and will be a graphic biography of an American bison. The story has been pronounced by those who have read it "the high water mark of Mr. Hawkes' work." The bison is decidedly the most dramatic subject he has yet treated, and he has done it full justice in a tale intense with action, color, and the life of the prairies as it was forty years ago. Charles Copeland, the well-known animal painter, is making the illustrations and cover insert.

PLATT & PECK COMPANY have sent us the following books: "Games and Amusements," a book describing many indoor games; two works by Henry Frith, "Practical Palmistry" and "How to Read Character in Handwriting;" a new edition of "The Standard Comic Reciter;" "Photography," a complete guide to all the branches of the art; "Egypt and How to See It," illustrated in color by A. O. Lamplough, a little work issued in three languages under the supervision of the Egyptian State Railways; "Stars Shown to the Children," by Ellison Hawks, in the Shown to the Children Series; "Health Hints and Health Talks," by E. R. Pritchard; "Buttered Toasts," by Fred Emerson Brooks; a collection of verse compiled by Hamilton Turner called "A Bundle of Good Cheer;" and a new edition of Mrs. Beeton's "International Cookery."

AN interesting point of law is raised by a suit which is being brought against Anatole France, of the French Academy, by M. Lemerre, the well-known French publisher. M. Lemerre states that in 1882 he purchased for £120 the copyright of a "History of France," written by Anatole France. Having kept the manuscript for twenty-nine years, he has now decided to publish it, and has sent the first batch of proofs to the author for correction. Anatole France, however, refuses to correct the proofs. He contests the rights which the publisher claims and, according to the London Morning Post, objects to publication on the ground that the work in question was naturally influenced by the ideas which he held at the time. M. Lemerre will ask the Third Chamber of the Civil Tribunal to order M. France to hand over without delay the corrected proofs.

A NEW novel by Eden Phillpotts, author of "The Thief of Virtue," "The Haven," "Tales of the Tenements," etc., is published this week by John Lane Company. The title is "Demeter's Daughter." The scene is laid in Dartmoor. John Redmond is the subject of a biographical study in Irish politics by L. G. Redmond-Howard, published also this week by John Lane Company. The book is illustrated and carries a photogravure frontispiece. Among the topics covered in the course of Redmond's career are the Parnell crisis, 1890-1893, the Home Rule bill, the South African war, and the present advance toward Irish autonomy. "The Studio Year Book of Decorative Art, 1911," published this week by John Lane Company, contains over 500 illustrations, including 17 color plates. The text matter comprises articles on decorative and applied art by E. G. Halton, L. Deubner and A. S. Levetus.

THE authorities in charge of the Library of Parliament, Ottawa, are prepared to make a handsome gift to the State of New York to replace in part the valuable books lost in the fire in the Capitol at Albany. The Library of Parliament has a valuable collection of United States Federal and State documents, and among them is a large number of duplicates. These duplicates it is proposed to give to New York. They cover a large part of the period between 1850 and 1907. They are stored in vaults in the Parliament buildings, and are in perfect preservation. The exact details about them will be made known to the New York authorities within a few days by Martin Griffin, the librarian, and the Hon. Charles Marcel, Speaker of the House of Commons. The generous courtesy of the Canadian authorities will be deeply appreciated by the many friends of the New York State Library.

A. PRICE DILLONT, who is connected with the Wanaque River Paper Co., but who has for years made a hobby of the collection of curiosities of paper and its manufacturing, has interested Mr. Dana, of the Newark Public Library, in the possibility of showing there as a loan exhibit his own collection with additions. Several of the paper manufacturers have expressed their willingness to co-operate —one even with moving pictures illustrative of the processes of paper manufacture. There is considerable popular interest in the whole subject of paper, which such an exhibit, which Mr. Dana's experience renders him admirably fitted to conduct, would both stimulate and gratify. Possibly the collection could later be sent "on the road," as Mr. Dana's book binding exhibit was some years ago, and so reach, through library co-operation, a wider audience.

"SEEKERS ALL," by Mrs. Kenneth Combe, author of "Cecilia Kirkham's Son," has just been published by George H. Doran Company. It is an attractive and entertaining story of English life, having well-sustained humor and a plot of considerable novelty, with a surprising dénouement. This house has also ready "The Human Machine," by Arnold Bennett, whose versatility is well displayed in this remarkable freshly written book; W. R. Nicoll says of it in the British Weekly: "It might be imagined that the book is a psychological treatise. Nothing of the kind. The psychology is there all right, but it is put in such an attractive way that every man of intelligence will be drawn to read it." Another novel with this firm's imprint, "Lizbeth of the Dale," by Marian Keith; tells of Elizabeth Gordon, a Canadian girl, a tomboy while small and when grownup sure to do the unexpected, but through everything strong and brave and sweet.

DODD, MEAD & COMPANY publish this week four novels: "Hearts and the Highway," by Cyrus Townsend Brady, a story of gay gallants and a damsel fair who masquerades as a man and plays the highwayman, robbing the king's messenger and then falls in love with him; Louis Joseph Vance's "Cynthia-of-the-Minute" is the story of the adventures on the high seas of a witty old lady, a charming girl, a handsome young man, and a very red-faced, red-haired man of a dangerous kind; "What's-His-Name," the latest book by George Barr McCutcheon, has for its hero a little insignificant man, whose clever wife overshadows him, instead of the dashing youth, who carries all before him, that the public always expects from this author; this new kind of hero proves very satisfactory, and before the end of the tale he has won the thing he most wanted; "Yellow Men and Gold," by Gouverneur Morris, was the first long serial selected for the new magazine Adventure, and it would be hard to conceive of a story more full of incident and thrill than this story of a treasure hunt in which a ship full of Chinamen plays an important part.

STURGIS & WALTON are the publishers of the "Report of the Commission on Country Life," for which Mr. Roosevelt writes the introduction. This brief report was submitted to President Roosevelt two years ago (in January, 1909), and by him submitted to Congress. It was printed by Congress for its use, but it has not been available for popular distribution. The call for the report has been widespread, and it is now published in book form to meet this demand and to aid in putting the work of the commission widely before the public. The purpose of the commission was to determine the present status of country life in the United States, to point out its main deficiencies, and to suggest lines of action and inquiry. It could not make scientific investigations on its own account, but it proposed a number of investigations that should be made by Congress, states and other agencies. It looked on the question not from the viewpoint of technical farming, but as to means whereby country life may be redirected, to the end that a better rural civilization may be developed. It was the first inquiry of the kind, and wholly aside from its content the report must necessarily form one of the starting points for forthcoming rural progress along economic, social, educational and religious lines.

RECIPROCITY with Great Britain would seem assured when immediately following the announcement that Dr. Jowett, of Birmingham, is coming to New York appears the report of the call extended to Dr. A. C. Dixon, of Chicago, by the Metropolitan Tabernacle, London. This is the pulpit made famous by Charles H. Spurgeon, and the congregation who have been listening to the American preacher for some weeks past are said to have voted enthusiastically to offer him this permanent post in London. Two books have already emanated from his pen, "Heaven on Earth" and "Lights and Shadows of American Life." Both of these are published by Revell. Dr. Jowett's latest volume, "The Transfigured Church," a remarkable portrayal of what the church might be if it fully availed itself of all the forces and powers at its disposal, is also published by the Revell Company. Another popular British preacher to accept a call to an American pulpit is Dr. William J. Dawson, who comes to the pastorate of the Old First Presbyterian Church in Newark. This is a church that holds a position of leadership not unlike that of the Old South in Boston, and Dr. Dawson has now an opportunity to put in practice some of his clever but radical ideas regarding the relation of pastor and church members which have made his recent books, "A Prophet in Babylon," "A Soldier of the Future" and "Masterman and Son," among the most "talked of" works of fiction among churchgoing people of the present day. A new popular edition of his helpful counsel to young men, entitled "The Threshold of Manhood," is just announced by the Revell Company.

THE Putnams will soon publish "Fifteen Thousand Miles by Stage." Add the caption of the first chapter, "The Beginning of a Stage coach Honeymoon," and you have, with the title of the book, a faint suggestion of the absorbingly interesting and true experiences of an Illinois bride (told frankly and entertainingly by herself), an unbroken thirty-three year honeymoon on stage-coach wheels, in the saddle and canoe, mostly on the far West frontier and in the wilderness. The author, Carrie Adell Strahorn, is the wife of Robert E. Strahorn, president of one of the Harriman railways, who, at the opening of the story, was a dashing war correspondent, fresh from two years of campaigning with General Crook. The wedding over, the young couple quickly started from quiet Illinois for home and fortune in the then wilderness of Wyoming. Mr. Strahorn allied himself with prominent transcontinenal railway interests, and his duties required him to be almost constantly on the move in regions far remote from railway communication. It was settled from the beginning that his wife should accompany him whenever she wished, and she always did, no matter what privations or what dangers threatened. Blessed with good commonsense, courage and rare patience and optimism, the young couple surmounted difficulties which in the aggregate are appalling. The matter-of-fact story of every-day experiences is often spiced with comical situations, of which the author has a keen appreciation. While written mainly in the lighter vein, the book has important historical value. It is profusely illustrated, 100 sketches by Charles M. Russell, many of them full page, and four of them in colors, sketches by other artists, and about 150 half-tones from photos.

CANADIAN NOTES.

CALGARY, ALB.—At a meeting held in this city March 15, at which representative booksellers and stationers from all over the province were present, "The Alberta Booksellers' and Stationers' Association" was formed for the purpose of promoting the interests of its members and to secure friendly co-operation among them. The position of honorary president went to the dean of the stationery trade of Alberta, J. C. Linton, of this city, who has a record in this province of over twenty-five years, a long time as things go in the west. The presidency went to H. W. B. Douglas, of Edmonton, while F. E. Osborne, of this city, was chosen secretary-treasurer. Many live subjects were discussed at the first meeting of the Association: the date of publication of educational books, freight rates on books, the book jobbing situation in Canada, etc. The Association is certainly a sign of the literary alertness of the Canadian northwest.

MONTREAL, P. Q.—Theo. Lafleur, late of Wilson & Lafleur, has opened a law bookstore at 56 Notre Dame Street East, with a complete assortment of Canadian, French, English and American legal works.

OTTAWA.—A partnership between two well-known and experienced book and stationery men, C. H. Thorburn and George F. Abbott, has just been consummated, under the firm name of Thorburn & Abbott. The former has conducted a book and stationery business successfully for the last quarter of a century, and Mr. Abbott managed the James Ogilvy business, which stock last spring was purchased by James Hope & Sons. A department of Canadian books will be a feature. In a few weeks this firm will have on exhibition some old engravings of the early days of Ottawa.

ST. JOHN, N. B.—Among the important booktrade removals during the year past was the removal of E. G. Nelson & Co., booksellers and stationers, from the corner of King and Charlotte Streets to their new four-story store at 56 King Street, which has been entirely rebuilt for their use. The business of E. G. Nelson & Co. was established in 1880 at the corner of King and Charlotte Streets, and continued there until the removal last year to the new stand. J. Edmund Secord entered into the partnership in 1893, and on the death of Mr. Nelson, ten or twelve years ago, he succeeded to the business.

SYDNEY, C. B.—MacLeod's Bookstore has removed its business premises to 299 Charlotte Street.

TORONTO, ONT.—The trade name and good will of The Church Book Room, 235 Yonge Street, which last month went into liquidation, have been purchased by W. H. Dew and C. C. Durham, and the business will be continued under the old name at 27 Richmond Street West. T. H. Durham, the manager of the Yonge Street store, will continue to look after the management of the business. Especial attention will be paid to the filling of church and Sunday school supplies. The book and stationery stock of the Yonge Street business was purchased by the T. Eaton Co.

Frowde announces Kipling's "Child's History of England," which will be looked for with great interest in Canada, where Kipling's works have an immense circulation.

The young and progressive firm of McClelland & Goodchild, who have a growing library business, announce that they have taken over agencies for a number of American houses.

As to the books that are "going" in Canada: "The Broad Highway" is reported by McClelland & Goodchild to be among their best sellers. Cassell & Co. report heavy orders for "The Truth About Spain." "The Rosary" is reported by Mussons to be selling as fast as ever. They also state that "The Root of Evil" is taking very well, and that there is a great demand for Arnold Bennett's "How to Live on 24 Hours a Day." The Copp, Clark Co. find "Molly Make-Believe" yet one of their best sellers. They are publishing still another edition. Frank Danby's "Let the Roof Fall In" is also in steady demand. McLeod & Allen find their best present sellers to be "One Way Out," "The Bolted Door," "The Phantom of the Opera" and "Robert Kimberley." William Briggs find the best sellers for March were "Trail of '98," "Second Chance," "The Frontiersman," "The Magnet," "Clayhanger" and "Howard's End."

EVEN the Canadian booktrade has been taking an interest in the reciprocity question, though the matter of book publication and sale is not immediately affected. One of the publishers of Toronto is said to be so violently opposed to reciprocity that he makes the point that booksellers in the provincial towns are hesitating to buy, because they fear that the reciprocity agreement will pass and that Canada will be either bankrupt or annexed to the United States. This experience is, however, unique or perhaps the booksellers are not buying his particular output, for elsewhere the Canadian booktrade is doing well. Most of the titles are of British or American origin. Mussons, for instance, announce 50 titles, and it is difficult to pick out any real Canadian work. Even when a Canadian author appears it is likely that the real edition is being published in the U. S. A. or England. This same firm reports a large sale of Owen Johnson's American school stories.

BUSINESS NOTES.

CHICAGO, ILL.—A building to cost about $150,000, five stories and basement in height, will be erected by the American Book Company at 2140 Prairie Avenue, on land which has been purchased through Louis A. Seeberger from the Jones estate. It may be, it is said, that later it will be decided to put up a ten-story structure, in which event the cost will be nearer $300,000. The land comprises 100 by 178 feet.

CHICAGO, ILL.—The offices of The Progress Company, publishers, at 210 Monroe Street, were totally destroyed by fire on the morning of March 24. The Bookseller, C. A. Huling editor, will hereafter be published by a new company now forming, with offices at 30-32 North Dearborn Street.

JACKSONVILLE, FLA.—Owing to the very large increase in its business the Jacksonville Bookstore is forced to have larger quarters, and has been fortunate enough to secure an admirable corner location only one block away from the place it now occupies.

LONDON, ENGLAND.—The report of Cassell & Co., Ltd., for 1910 shows a profit of £28,346. The directors recommend that the dividend for the year be raised to 2½ per cent., leaving £16,126 surplus on the year's business. Five thousand pounds of the company's 6 per cent. debentures matured on December 31, and were paid off. No others have been issued to replace them. All the 6 per cent. debentures will have been redeemed by the end of next year. The net profit for 1909, after paying debenture interest, was £18,297, and for 1908 £16,388. The dividend for each of those years was 2 per cent. For three years before that there was no dividend at all.

LONDON, ENGLAND.—The printing firm of Eyre & Spottiswoode, Ltd., makes a public issue in the shape of an offer of £120,000 4½ per cent. mortgage debenture stock at 95 per cent. The company was formed three years ago with a share capital of £350,000. With trade debts, stock, and other items the total assets, including freeholds and leaseholds, but exclusive of goodwill, are given at £446,200, and the net profits for the last three years are certified to have averaged £12,000 per annum.

NEW YORK CITY.—The Association Book Co., James F. Drake president and manager, have recently moved into much larger quarters in the same building, No. 4 West 40th Street. A much larger stock of autographs, first editions and rare books will be found on their shelves. The firm name has been changed to James F. Drake, Incorporated.

NEW YORK CITY.—William Thomson, 35 West 42d Street, dealer in second-hand books, has sold his entire stock to Frederick Loeser & Co., Brooklyn, and will leave for Scotland on a visit.

NEW YORK CITY.—E. W. Johnson, formerly at 2 East 42d Street, has removed to 351 Fourth Avenue, near 26th Street.

NEW YORK CITY.—R. W. Crothers will remove from 246 Fourth Avenue, where he has been established for twenty years, to a new store at the southwest corner of Irving Place and 19th Street.

MR. APPLEBY SUGGESTS AN INDEX FOR POPULAR NOVELS.

APPLEBY said that to the great mass of novel readers a well-arranged index would be a precious boon. It is obvious that the need for an index is far more pressing in a book of fiction than, for instance, in a treatise on economics or history where a certain amount of orderly arrangement is inevitable. The principal advantage, however, would be in the way of saving time. To suppose that the novel reader has unlimited time at his disposal is absurd. Anything that will spare him effort would be a distinct gain. Publishers have already done something in that direction by printing on the book-wrapper a ready-made estimate of the value of the book. What they have failed to recognize is that in the same novel certain features will hold a different appeal for different classes of readers. And here is where an index would come in very handily.

Suppose, Appleby went on, the man of the house first picks up the book. What is it a man looks for in a novel? Excitement and "go." Very well, then. He turns to the index and picks out entries like the following:

Aeroplane, Devereux falls from, p. 3.
Blood, Red; see Red Blood.
Catastrophe, Averted; Helen saved from under an automobile, p. 27; from runaway horse, 39; from French count, 64; from train wreck, 159; from submarine, 233; Devereux escapes from thugs, 12; from Yaqui Indians, 127; from the Matterhorn, 256; from the Standard Oil Company, 372.
Red Blood, Devereux's; seethes, p. 2; boils, 12; goes to his head, 22; rises in outrage, 32; sings in his veins the chant of Anglo-Saxon forefathers, 85.

And in the same way, the woman of the house would save time by looking up references that most appeal to her:

Accidental meetings, Helen's with Devereux, p. 30.
Bouquet, the first, p. 5.
Bridge, Helen loses $200 at, p. 29; Helen loses $300 at, 43; Helen determines to learn, 44.
Despondency, Helen's, at Devereux's coldness, p. 4; at his taking her "No" as final, 123.
Jealousy, Helen's, pp. 5, 7, 9, 11, 13, 15, 17, et seq.; Devereux's, pp. 6, 8, 10, 12, 14, 16, 18, et seq.
Kiss, Helen's and Devereux's first, p. 13; again, 17; again, 22, et seq.
Reconciliation; see Jealousy, Despondency, Heart-ache, Remorse, Winsomeness.

Appleby cited the preceding examples as being only faintly indicative of how far the index might be developed in the hands of, let us say, a trained student from the Library School at Albany.

There are many readers of fiction, Appleby went on to say, who are interested not in the story, but in the style. They take delight in the choice, unusual word, in the bold, unhackneyed phrase. Such discriminating readers could not help finding pleasure in an index which should give them the happy little touches they want without putting them to the trouble of reading the book. Appleby mentioned a few such verbal felicities:

Glimpses Henry's Approach, Laura, p. 4.
Man-Child, Laura yearns for a, p. 127.
Senses his Presence, Laura, p. 32.
Trills her reply, Laura, p. 11.
Vibrates, Laura, pp. 5, 13, 17, et seq.

Finally, said Appleby, his index would be invaluable to the author himself when it comes to the reading of final proofs. Novelists will slip up now and then; you will remember how Thackeray used to mix up the names of his characters. In the heat of composition and going to press a writer may occasionally tangle up his plot; and the contradictions may be so widely scattered as to make discovery, even by a careful reader, very difficult. But no errors could creep into the pages if our author, in going carefully over the index, should happen on an entry like the following:

Brewster, Henry; meets Alice, p. 7; goes to Africa, 121; dies, 134; runs for Congress, 275; is introduced to Alice, 324.

And Appleby insisted that there was really a great deal of merit in his idea.—New York Evening Post.

Two Trade Directories

1. A Directory of Public Libraries in the United States and Canada, containing over 1000 addresses of the more important ones, each with the name of the librarian, total number of volumes in library, total accessions during 1909, yearly income, and amount expended for book purchase during the past year. Nothing better in the way in a select list has ever been attempted.

   This directory is part of the "Annual Library Index." 8vo, cloth, $5.00. Not printed separately.

2. A Directory of Booksellers in the principal towns of the United States and Canada, with their specialties noted (including the names of Department Stores that sell books), with street addresses in large cities. It eliminates the names of drug stores, cigar shops and newsdealers that sell periodicals and paper bound books only. No better selected list has ever been printed.

   This directory, printed with interleaved blank pages for annotations, forms part of "The Annual American Catalog." 8vo, cloth, $3.00. Not printed separately.

For $3 you get the "Annual American Catalog of Books," with the Directory of Booksellers.

For $5 you get the "Annual Library Index," with the Directory of Libraries.
